Target: Cops in 'jueteng' areas

FOR FAILING to stamp out "jueteng" in their areas, several high-ranking police officials will be relieved of their posts.

Interior Secretary Joey Lina yesterday said he would announce this week the names of police officers to be relieved, suspended and administratively charged for their failure to curb illegal gambling.

The list includes police chiefs, city and district commanders, and provincial and regional directors, according to the interior secretary.

"No matter how big the accomplishments of these officers are in other fronts, they shall be held accountable and liable for failure to curb illegal gambling," Lina said.

Lina disclosed his plan to name the police officials to be fired after Senate Minority Floor Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. called for a crackdown on illegal gambling.

Pimentel challenged President Macapagal-Arroyo to go hard on illegal gambling, especially in her province Pampanga.

He urged Ms Macapagal to crack the whip on suspected gambling lord Rodolfo "Bong" Pineda, allegedly a friend of the President's, to prove that she was serious in fighting corruption.

Lina insisted that the government was "relentlessly" fighting illegal gambling despite ineffective laws against it.

He disclosed that Task Force Jericho of the Department of Internal Affairs

7 chosen Magsaysay awardees

TWO young women at the forefront of the struggle against labor abuses and crimes against women have won this year's Ramon Magsaysay Award for emergent leadership, a new category of Asia's version of the Nobel Prize.

The two are Indonesia's Dita Indah Sari and Cambodia's Oung Chantol, whom the Ramon Magsaysay Award Foundation described as "two undaunted women leaders and nation movers in the new millennium."

Carmencita T. Abella, RMAF president, said the foundation introduced the category this year "to

Mayon girding for another big blast

BY ROLY EMBILE

PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

LEGAZPI CITY—Mayon yesterday spewed lava and belched huge amounts of gas as pressure continued to build up inside the volcano that may lead to another explosive eruption, according to volcanologists.

High-frequency tremors were accompanied by the continued bulging of the volcano's slopes, according to the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (Phivolcs).

Resident volcanologist Ed Laguerta said these indicated that an active magma system was accumulating pressure.

"If such pressure continues to build up in the following days, an explosive eruption may recur," Phivolcs said in a bulletin.

Alert Level 5, which means that an imminent eruption could occur anytime, remains in effect.

The National Disaster Coordinating Council (NDCC) said the 6-kilometer-radius permanent danger zone, as well as the 7-km extended danger zone, should remain off-limits at all times.

It also advised residents near Mayon to guard against hot pyroclastic materials that may be loosened during a heavy rainfall.

The 2,462-meter (8,141-foot) Mayon exploded three times on Thursday, sending towering plumes of sulfuric ash and rocks and triggering flows of superheated lava.

The explosions forced thousands of people from their homes into schools converted into evacuation camps, where officials said living conditions were becoming harsh as supplies were slowly dwindling.

As of Saturday afternoon, 48,774 people from 38 barangays had moved to evacuation centers, according to the NDCC.

MAYON/A6

GAS-BELCHING Mayon Volcano, as seen from Barangay Matanag in Daraga, Albay, may be headed for another explosive eruption, according to government volcanologists.

Inmates see hope in school behind bars

PREPARING for life after prison, convicts attend a Grade V class at the Itas Elementary School inside the New Bilibid Prison in Muntinlupa City.

DENNIS SABANGAN

BY BLANCHE S. RIVERA

WHEN Florante looks out the window of his classroom at the New Bilibid Prison, he sees, beyond the bars, a horizon of fresh hope.

Florante, 29, is one of 165 inmates among the penitentiary's 15,000 prisoners who are diligently working for the degree of Bachelor of Science in Commerce, majoring in Small Entrepreneurship, at the Muntinlupa City home of the country's most notorious criminals.

Florante, who was convicted in a homicide case, says education in prison is more dangerous and challenging, but as equally rewarding as it is in the outside world.

"The purpose of going to school here is not so much the academics but rehabilitation," Florante told the INQUIRER in a recent interview. "Education inside prison seeks to change people, to prepare us to live in a free society."

Some 200 inmates have already graduated from the free college education program of the NBP and the University of Perpetual Help of Rizal (UPHR), since the program was established in 1982 with the help of the Rotary Club of Las Piñas.

Every morning, after doffing their prison uniforms and donning civilian clothes, the student-inmates go to school, which in their case is a one-floor structure in the medium-security compound of the NBP.

The classes last from 8 a.m. until around 4 p.m., when the students go to the library to research their assignments and projects until dusk, and then return to their cells in two dormitories reserved for their use.

Inmates with sufficient schooling are encouraged to enroll in college, while semi-literate prisoners enroll in elementary or high school. Illiterate detainees are mandated to register for nonformal education.

"The only reason I enrolled at the nonformal level was so I could write to my wife, who did not know that I was in prison," said 33-year-old Marcos, a sixth grader and president of the elementary student council.

GMA to file affidavit on scandal today

BY MARTIN P. MARFIL,
MALOU GUANZON-APALISOK
PDI Visayas Bureau
AND DONA PAZZIBUGAN

ON THE instruction of his wife, First Gentleman Mike Arroyo is cutting short his vacation in the United States by four days, amid allegations that he received a bribe in connection with a vetoed telecommunications franchise bill.

President Macapagal-Arroyo "has told me to return, and I'll return to surprise her because it's our anniversary on Aug. 2 (Pinababalik ako ni GMA at babalik na rin ako at sosopresahan ko siya kasi anniversary namin sa Aug. 2)," Arroyo announced in a radio phone patch from San Francisco yesterday.

Arroyo, who left Manila on Tuesday night in the middle of the influence-peddling scandal, said he planned to be back by Aug. 2 instead of Aug. 6, his original arrival date.

Speaking in his weekly radio program on dzRH, Arroyo did not discuss the allegations against him during the entire one-hour show, and aired only another appeal for political unity.

The President's husband, who had departed saying he was very tired and needed a medical checkup, said he was being treated for bronchitis by Filipino physician Rudy Sotto.

He said he was scheduled for more tests, and had been put on an antibiotic regimen. He added that he and the doctor were planning to play some golf before he returns this week.

He also said his daughter Luli would be pleased to learn that he was five pounds lighter than when she last saw him.

"Please tell Luli that I'm reducing and have already lost five pounds because I'm under medi-

Palace bribe inquiry should start at veto

BY AMANDO DORONILA

THE STARTING point of any inquiry into allegations that Mike Arroyo took a P50-million bribe to seek the recall of a presidential veto on a congressional bill granting franchises to two telecommunications companies should be the hard fact that President

ANALYSIS Macapagal-Arroyo vetoed the franchise.

The President told a news conference on Friday that she had vetoed the franchise, she had not recalled the veto, and the veto would remain.

This fact is incontrovertible and should be recognized by the public and the political opposition.

It should be emphasized that the opposition is glossing over this fact in an effort to blow up First Gentleman Mike Arroyo's involvement into a cause célèbre to smear the Macapagal administration.

Having emphasized this, it is clear that most information flowing from the case is hearsay that requires verification. This is where the investigations will have to come in to establish evidence.

Whether the investigation is conducted by the Office of the Ombudsman or the Senate blue ribbon committee, neither inquiry could start without taking off from ground zero or Kilometer Zero, i.e., the presidential veto.

The veto is the epicenter of the investigation. The President has asked the Office of the Ombudsman to investigate the allegations. She has also welcomed an investigation by the Senate blue ribbon committee.

Gloria to thank Mahathir in KL

PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo is to personally thank Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad for helping broker peace talks with the secessionist Moro Islamic Liberation Front, Malacañang said.

The President will be making her first foreign trip to Malaysia next month, the Palace said in a statement without giving specific dates. But her aides earlier said the visit would take place from Aug. 7 to 8.

Topping discussions between the two leaders will be Ms Macapagal's economic agenda, improving bilateral ties and the ongoing peace talks with the MILF.

The MILF has been waging a 23-year rebellion to establish an independent Islamic state in the south. It has signed a ceasefire pact with the government and a new round of peace negotiations were begun last week hosted by Kuala Lumpur.

In an interview with TV3 Television Malaysia yesterday, the President said the economy and the peace process in Mindanao would be the main subjects of their discussion when she meets with Mahathir in Kuala Lumpur.

The President said she also looked forward to strengthening border cooperation mechanisms, such as information exchange, and in "creating an environment of trust between the Philippines and Malaysia to reduce potential irritants."

Another topic high on the agenda of discussion concerns the revitalization of the Brunei-Indonesia-Malaysia-Philippines-East Asian Growth Area (Bimp-Eaga).

Both leaders are also expected to discuss strengthening of joint border patrols to prevent Filipino kidnappers from raiding beach resorts off Sabah. AFP

Gov't-MILF communique up

KUALA LUMPUR—Philippine government negotiators and separatist Islamic rebels who are engaged in a peace negotiation in Malaysia are expected to issue a communiqué on security arrangements, a senior official said yesterday.

Maulana Alonto, media officer with the Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), told AFP that a technical panel from the MILF and the Philippine government were ironing out the mechanism to stop hostilities in Mindanao.

"We are now studying the counter proposals about security to end the hostilities. Each group has submitted their new proposals.

"Hopefully, we can resolve the differences today (Sunday). I'm crossing my fingers. It looks positive," Maulana told AFP. He declined to elaborate.

Maulana said each team had submitted counter proposals related to the ground rules to stop hostilities between the rebels and the Philippine armed forces.

The MILF has been waging a 23-year rebellion to establish an independent Islamic state in the south. It has signed a ceasefire pact with Manila and a new round of peace negotiations hosted by Malaysia.

The two teams began peace talks on July 24 at a beachfront hotel in Port Dickson town, south of Kuala Lumpur. They are due to meet until Aug. 3. AFP

Judges told: Be sensitive to Green cases

PUERTO PRINCESA CITY—Supreme Court Justice Reynato Puno urged trial court judges to pay as much attention to environmental cases as other more conventional cases brought before them.

Puno, who was keynote speaker at a four-day seminar here on environmental law for judges, said the problem of environmental protection merits more than just passing interest.

"We have an indispensable role to play in promoting an environment which ranked Manila 13th in a list of the world's 15 dirtiest cities, where smoke levels are five times higher than in Latin America.

He called judges the new guardians of the country's environment, and exhorted them not to stop at traditional methods and instead find creative ways to resolve environmental disputes.

He cited an Asian Development Bank report on the Asian environment which ranked Manila 13th in a list of the world's 15 dirtiest cities, where smoke levels are five times higher than in Latin America.

"Pollution and environmental destruction are pervasive. Political will is also lacking and environmental programs are given a limited budget," Puno said. The SC justice said that despite the presence of environmental laws, Filipinos' environmental consciousness is still far from satisfactory.

Puno said the country needed a strong pro-environment policy to prevent further environmental destruction.

"This is just half of the war. The other half is the enforcement of these laws, which is a more difficult process," he said.

In environmental cases, there is a collision of conflicting interests and the judiciary will have to take center stage in resolving these confrontations, he said.

"The courts are the final arbiter of clashes between rights and duties," said Puno.

Judges need a commanding knowledge of the emerging body of environmental laws, Puno said, adding that judges are not mere passive referees.

"The god of law cannot prevail over the god of nature," he said.

Bukidnon Rep. Juan Romeo Nereus Acosta, principal author of the Clean Air Act, said judges can either be prophets of doom or purveyors of hope.

"The last thing we need in this country is a desperate government, desperate judiciary and desperate people," he said.

Acosta expressed some frustration over the slow implementation of the Clean Air Act.

"Since the law was enacted last year, the government has not given any budget for it and it is unlikely to give it a budget this year because of the country's economic problems," Acosta said.

The seminar was organized by the Tanggol Kalikasan, a public interest environmental office, and the Philippine Judicial Academy, with support from various foreign aid agencies. Jafelle Tesorio, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

CHR exec in hot water for sexual harassment

manded why he was subjecting her to such vulgarities.

Quintos insisted that they had a relationship, Ramos said.

"He has been exploiting and taking advantage of my being his subordinate and a single parent," said Ramos whose husband left her several years ago. She lives with her two young daughters.

The incident happened on Oct. 2, 2000 and Ramos said she began thinking that afternoon about filing a complaint.

One of her officemates retrieved the piece of tissue with the semen from the wastebasket and brought it to the National Bureau of Investigation for examination, she said.

The NBI forensic chemistry division reported that the paper had been found positive for "seminal stains."

Asked why it took her a long time to file a complaint, Ramos said she was gripped with fear as Quintos was constantly threatening her with "very damaging consequences" should she file charges.

Ramos said Quintos threatened to charge her with perjury, for allegedly falsely representing herself as a married woman in her official records.

"But it was an honest mistake. And when I was trying to correct my civil status, he kept on harassing me," she said.

The complainant, who has been working for the past 10 years with the CHR, said the incidents started after she sought Quintos' legal advice when she discovered that her husband had faked their marriage.

However, Quintos soon allegedly started making unwelcome sexual advances, which became bolder each day, she said.

In one instance, she said, Quintos allegedly handed her a piece of rolled tissue with fresh semen.

Ramos said she confronted Quintos and demanded why he was subjecting her to such vulgarities.

Quintos insisted that they had a relationship, Ramos said.

"He has been exploiting and taking advantage of my being his subordinate and a single parent," said Ramos whose husband left her several years ago. She lives with her two young daughters.

Ramos said Quintos threatened to charge her with perjury, for allegedly falsely representing herself as a married woman in her official records.

"But it was an honest mistake. And when I was trying to correct my civil status, he kept on harassing me," she said.

The complainant also alleged that Quintos had, through various actions, given their officemates the impression that the two of them had a relationship.

"He even enlarged through a computer one of my pictures taken during one of my assignments and displayed it in his office beside his photo," she said.

Ramos said Quintos, who is married but lives away from his family, had been doggedly courting her and that she had turned him down several times.

She said that several times, after she had rejected his suit, Quintos would scold her in public, causing her great pain and humiliation.

She said the CHR official would call on her at home very late at night, which terrified her family as he would be drunk sometimes.

In his counter-affidavit, Quintos sought to destroy the credibility of Ramos, saying she allegedly committed 19 instances of grave dishonesty in her affidavit of complaint.

He claimed that there were no witnesses to any alleged act of "molestation."

He has filed multiple charges of "grave dishonesty and grave misconduct" against the complainant.

Ramos, who has been reassigned to the CHR's central office, said she was heartened by the new administrative rules on dealing with sexual harassment in government offices announced recently by President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Abus give military the slip anew

MALUSO, Basilan— Abu Sayyaf kidnappers have slipped through a military cordon covering the central jungles of Basilan Island, an intelligence source told the Agence France Press yesterday.

The official, who declined to be named, said the Abu Sayyaf gang had now reached the town of Sumisip on the southern coast along with some of the 21 US and American hostages they have been holding for more than two months.

The source said witnesses in the area saw Abu Sayyaf leader Abu Sabaya boarding a jeep with American missionary couple Martin and Gracia Burnham, who looked weak and haggard.

"They are both thin and the man has grown a beard," one villager said.

Some of the Filipino hostages were also spotted in the area.

Abu Sabaya was reportedly backed by some 80 armed supporters, who positioned themselves along a river apparently to ambush troops who might close in Sabaya's group.

The rebels were also armed with several anti-tank rockets, and at one time stopped at a riverside village to buy food and fuel, the intelligence source said.

The Abu Sayyaf abducted three Americans and 17 Filipinos from a western Philippine beach resort in May, whom they later took to Basilan. They later took more hostages as they fled a government assault.

The rebels have released several of the hostages allegedly after ransom payments, but have murdered four others. They also claim to have beheaded a third American, Californian Guillermo Sobero, but whose body has not been recovered.

President Macapagal-Arroyo on Saturday again vowed to crush the rebels "to fix this problem once and for all."

She had given the military powers to detain suspected rebels and their supporters in a massive crackdown that swept through Basilan, the nearby Jolo Island and Zamboanga City.

The military has arrested over 80 rebels and supporters, but have been accused of torturing suspects by human rights groups.

Reacting to the criticism, Arroyo said: "This is war and if we wish to end the Abu Sayyaf problem, then we really have to act."

The agency identified as "emerging concerns" the supply of potable water, containers, purifying tablets and medicines.

The NDCC noted "insufficient" calamity funds for local government units and food for the evacuees.

Disease surveillance is ongoing at 31 evacuation sites.

Mt. Mayon Commission

In Manila, Sen. Blas Ople has filed a bill seeking the creation of a Mt. Mayon Relief and Rehabilitation Commission with an initial fund of P15 billion.

Ople said the agency would be patterned after the Mt. Pinatubo Rehabilitation Commission in Central Luzon, which was established in 1992. Congress provided a budget of P30 billion to the commission.

"Our brothers in Bicol are no less entitled to prompt congressional support," Ople said. "There is a positive side to natural disasters. They afford us the opportunity to strengthen the bonds of national solidarity by allocating national resources as aid to victims," he said.

Veronica Madulid, chief of the Albay Provincial Health Office, yesterday denied reports that thousands of evacuees in the province had fallen ill.

"There is absolutely no truth to reports coming from Manila that more than 6,000 evacuees are now afflicted with serious diseases," she said.

Madulid said the latest health and sanitation report she had sent to the Provincial Disaster Coordinating Council recorded 335 cases of minor complaints from the evacuation centers.

She said these were mostly cases of coughing and minor skin irritations probably caused by volcanic ash. The other ailments were fever and flu.

Most of the cases were reported from Guinobatan, Camalig and Malilipot towns. Some came from the cities of Tabaco and Legazpi.

Madulid said the cases had been attended to.

A news report yesterday quoted a report of the Health Emergency Management Office to the NDCC that more than 6,000 evacuees in the towns of Malilipot, Guinobatan and Camalig and in Tabaco City had fallen ill.

"We could not have been the source of such exaggerated health report reaching Manila,"

MAYON Volcano is monitored by the Philippine Institute of Volcanology and Seismology from a nearby station. VALHANDUMON Madulid said.

Adequate medical supply

She gave assurance that enough medicines and medical and paramedical personnel, including volunteers, were available to address any medical emergency.

To help avoid an outbreak of diseases, the Provincial Social Welfare and Development Office (PSWDO) has implemented measures to decongest overcrowding in 31 evacuation centers.

Yolanda Guanzon, PSWDO head, told the INQUIRER that more rooms would be made available to evacuees.

Guanzon said they would limit the number of people in every room to 30.

The Department of Health had earlier recommended that at most 10 families (with an average of five members each) would occupy a room.

But initial reports showed that up to 15 families were squeezed like sardines inside most of the rooms.

Guanzon disclosed that the PDCC had built three-seat permanent concrete toilets in most of the 31 evacuation centers in place of temporary ditches dug 6 feet into the ground.

She said a water filtration system made available by the DOH was being brought to areas where water was scarce.

The device can purify water at a rate of 10 cubic meters per hour.

The DOH regional office has rejected the use of fogging devices to combat the spread of mosquitoes and other disease-carrying insects.

Health regional director Gerardo Bayogo instead ordered a regular cleanup operation to destroy the breeding sites of mosquitoes. With reports from Carlito Pablo and AFP

The Mercedes-Benz E220 CDI

Elegance. Power. Economy.

The Mercedes-Benz E220 CDI is equipped with the latest Commonrail Direct injection technology. Pioneered by Mercedes-Benz, the CDI principle involves a constant high pressure pump to cylinders resulting in increased horsepower and a maximum torque of 315 Nm at 1800-2600 rpm with better mileage, while acceleration is at 0-100 kph in 10.4 seconds.

Fuel consumption is much lower than other vehicles in the luxury segment at 16 kgs./liter, a plus factor in these times of increasing gasoline prices. Yet, ignition is much quieter, and very low emissions by European standards is achieved with an efficient combustion process which reduces nitrogen oxide effusion.

And with power and economy is the E220 CDI's matchless exterior and interior elegance, with an excellent on-board atmosphere.

Test drive the E220 CDI and find out why you may want to take it home after the experience.

RANDY HORMILLOSA

A POLICEMAN inspects the Tamaraw vehicle where nine alleged members of the Marilao Gang were killed near Anda Circle in Manila on July 21. Police said it was a shootout but other accounts point to a robbery.

Witness fears for life after TV interview

BY CHRISTIAN ESGUERRA

THE PRIMARY witness in the killing of nine suspected Marilao Gang members in Manila last week has gone into hiding, fearing for his life in the hands of police.

The witness, whose name is being withheld by the INQUIRER, has not reported for work since an interview he gave on GMA-7's "Emergency" television show last Friday, his brother said yesterday.

"Natatakot sya para sa panibaya niya. Alon niyang wala siyang laban sa mga pulis (He's afraid for his family. He knows he doesn't stand a chance against the police)," the brother told the INQUIRER yesterday.

The witness worked near Anda Circle on Bonifacio Drive in Intramuros where Philippine National Police Intelligence Group operatives stopped and surrounded the vehicle of the suspects on July 21.

In an interview with the INQUIRER the day after the incident, the witness said the policemen shot at the suspects with "impunity" and "did not give them a chance."

"Patay na pero pinagbabaril pa. Siniguro talagang patay (The suspects were already dead but they were still being shot at. They (police) made sure they were dead)," he said.

TV appearance

The witness said he saw the entire incident, which lasted about five minutes. He gave a similar account to GMA's "Emergency," which aired the interview showing his face, according to his brother.

Since then, the witness has gone into hiding with his family, fearing police might go after him to "silence" him, the brother said.

"I don't know when he'll show up. He's in a very difficult situation. His job, his safety and family are at stake," the brother said in Filipino.

Police have denied summarily executing the suspects. They said they fired back after one of the suspects fired at them first.

They said they had been tailing the suspects for some time after an informant told them they were planning to rob a moneychanger in Malate, Manila.

They said that when the suspects sensed they were being followed, they stopped their vehicle, a red Toyota FX, and one of them fired a shot at the lawmen.

It was then, police said, that they opened fire on the suspects.

Different story

The witness told the INQUIRER and GMA a different story, however.

He said the police operatives opened fire on the suspects' vehicle immediately after forcing it to a stop on Bonifacio Drive in front of the Department of Public Works and Highways building.

He said the police closed in to about three meters from the van, all the while peppering it with bullets.

Eight of the suspects died on the spot while the ninth died on the way to the hospital.

The suspect admitted hearing a lone shot before the fusillade from the police. He could not tell, however, who had fired the shot or where it had come from.

He recalled seeing the suspects' bodies, most with their guns still tucked in the waist.

Violent gang

Five of the suspects were identified as Giovani Jalique, Nhold Usop, Ricky Ismail, Abdul Theng and Casaneding Naga. They were believed to be Muslims.

Separated from them were two .45-cal. and one .38-cal. pistols and an MK2 fragmentation grenade.

Police said the suspects were members of the Marilao Gang believed to be behind the spate of jewelry store robberies in Metro Manila.

Gang members use hammers (marilao) to break into jewelry display cases to scoop up the gems.

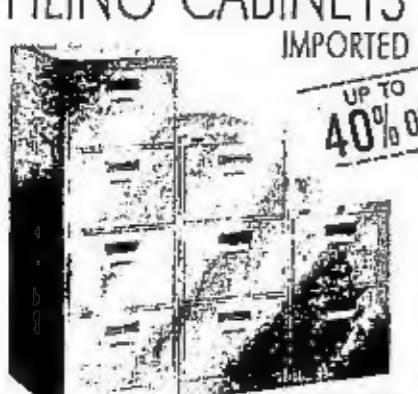

They are also known to hurl grenades behind them to discourage any pursuit. This type of robbery thus causes lots of injuries and even death.

When things got too hot for the gang, they were known to switch to robbing banks.

They were reportedly on their way to rob a moneychanger at the Trader's Hotel in Malate when they were stopped by the police.

Sour-grape politics

POLITICAL hell hath no fury like a former Senate president scorned. Or shabbily treated, as Sen. Aquilino Pimentel Jr. intimated he had been, to journalists at a forum and to the listening public over radio last Saturday.

In response to President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's statement that the opposition had no alternatives to counter the programs she outlined in her first State of the Nation Address, the new Senate minority floor leader said they did, and proceeded to give an example.

"In gambling, Ms President, we learned that illegal gambling—jueteng—is strong in Pampanga," he said on his radio program. "We should be able to put an end to that. It is your home province. We should show that we are sincere in these things."

To which the proper response, paraphrasing the immortal question from the Watergate hearings, ought to be: What did he learn, and when did he learn it?

That jueteng continues to thrive in Pampanga hardly qualifies as news. But apparently, when Pimentel was Senate president, he had not learned about it. When he kept himself in the race for Vice President-appointee, he was still in the dark about it. When he was campaigning for a 13-0 People Power Coalition vote, he still did not know about it. When he was directing the passage of the controversial power reform bill, he remained ignorant of it. Indeed, it seems that, even up to the crucial hours of the morning of July 23, just before the Senate of the 12th Congress voted for its new president, he had not even heard about it. But by the afternoon, after he lost the Senate vote, Pimentel apparently learned about it, and many more things too.

Losing a vote must be what all losers say it is: an educational experience.

No matter how much he denies it, the public knows that Pimentel's sudden hard-line opposition stance was determined by his loss in the Senate. If he had retained his presidency of the upper chamber, we can be certain that he would have remained oblivious of the alleged state of illegal gambling in Pampanga.

But, astoundingly, he remains triumphantly in denial. "There is no bitterness whatsoever in my heart," he said the other day. But in the same forum, he also said: "The coalition did not find me a worthy member of the PPC despite me, a Senate president, having held the microphone for the President during her inauguration... Yet when the time came, they did not even consider me for possible retention."

Pimentel used to be a politician of principle, someone who had the moral authority to steer the country's most controversial blue ribbon hearings and then the Senate itself during the country's first impeachment trial. Today, however, he is apparently willing to let personal hurt dictate his politics, and the country be damned.

Of course, he will not say so himself. In fact, for a born-again oppositionist, Pimentel retains the fair-minded habits of a human rights lawyer. "The minority in the Senate will be a responsible opposition group," he said. "We will not object just for the sake of objection," he added.

In raising the tempting possibility of asking the President to testify on the growing Philippine Communications Clearinghouse Inc. scandal, he added a lawyerly qualification. "I don't want to start unless we have a stronger basis for the investigation," he said. (In other words, what he has so far is good only for a sound bite or two.)

But these nuances have been cancelled out by his words in black and white.

He has certainly learned enough to criticize just for the sake of criticism. His gratuitous and oft-repeated comment on the President's Sona, that it reminded him of a "promising" Joe de Venecia on the campaign trail, sounded good on TV, but did absolutely nothing for the nation. At a time when the country needed help in lifting itself out of a sense of drift and distress, the just-replaced Senate president focused his attention on the President's style of presentation.

We paraphrase Brown's Law: Never oppose on style when you can oppose on substance. It is time to remind Pimentel of his roots in principled opposition.

Hospital director wants to destroy jobs of gardeners

"WE will create jobs, not destroy them."

That was one of the promises of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo in her State of the Nation Address. But apparently her subordinates don't believe her.

The director of the Lung Center of the Philippines (LCP) wants to deprive entrepreneurs of their means of livelihood, for what reason he does not want to say. These entrepreneurs are small businessmen growing and selling orchids, ornamentals and tree seedlings on a piece of property that the LCP is renting out to them. This is located beside the hospital—now under reconstruction after it was burned some time ago—on the Quezon Memorial Circle in Quezon City. The stores pay about P200,000 a month in rent to the LCP. They have been there for about 10 years already.

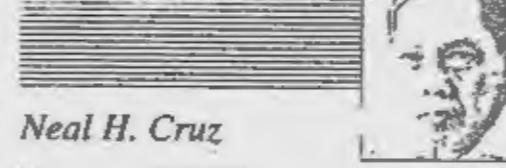

In 1998, the 3,000-square-meter area was a cordon-choked wasteland where drug addicts and prostitutes did their thing, hidden from the view of passing motorists. An entrepreneur leased the property from the LCP, cleared and developed it, and sub-leased small plots to gardeners, who invested a lot of money to construct their stores and gardens.

During the Estrada administration, however, the new hospital director cancelled the original lease agreement and collected directly from the tenants. Then last week, the tenants were given notices to vacate the premises. They were given an Aug. 1 deadline. No reason was given why they were being driven away.

The tenants have asked a number of times for a meeting with the hospital management but they were ignored. Last week, one of the gates leading to the compound was padlocked by hospital security guards.

Why are they being ejected? Hospital management refuses to say. One rumor says a mini-golf course was to be put up there. Another says it would be still another shopping mall. Still another rumor says a high-rise condominium would rise there. And another says an outpatient clinic of the hospital would be put up there. The present

AS I SEE IT

stores and offices would be converted into doctors' clinics. But these are all rumors and the LCP management refuses to dispel them by revealing the real reason why the tenants are being ejected. Which gives rise to suspicions that the management is keeping it secret because it would be embarrassing if its motive were exposed.

If they are being replaced by an outpatient department, the tenants are willing to leave because that would be for the good of the public.

The trouble is the hospital does not want to reimburse them for the expenses they incurred in constructing their stores and developing their gardens. Unlike in shopping malls, the hospital did not spend a single centavo in their construction; the tenants spent bundles of money for them.

One invested almost P3 million on his rented property. In all fairness, since the hospital would take over the stores, the tenants should at least get some of their investments back. They would need fresh capital to start all over again. And even squatters are paid a "disturbance fee" when they are ejected. And these are not squatters but legitimate tenants.

But if it is for an outpatient clinic, why is the hospital giving priority to depriving them of jobs when there is a very big empty space right beside the hospital, owned by it, where the outpatient clinic can be constructed? And why embark on a new construction when the reconstruction of the burned hospital is not even halfway finished yet? Is the outpatient rumor just a ploy to eject the tenants? Is there an influential land developer whose greedy eyes are focused on the property? Is there somebody very influential with the director who wants to take over the property?

Remember the uproar when it was discovered that the Ayala Corp. planned to construct condominiums and a shopping mall on the empty property of the Government Service Insurance System also on the Quezon City Circle? Such a development would make traffic congestion in the Circle, already very bad at present, a terrible nightmare. Besides, that is not the place for condominiums and a mall. That is a place reserved for government offices. So any plan to put up condominiums, a mall or a mini-golf course on the rented garden center should be nipped in the bud now.

"All we want is transparency and due process," said the garden tenants. Why is the hospital management so shy and embarrassed to meet with them? Because the hospital director refuses to talk with them, the tenants have sent a letter to Health Secretary Manuel Dayrit to find out what is going on. If Dayrit is also embarrassed to talk to them, the tenants plan to go up to President Macapagal.

Ms President, these people already have jobs. You don't have to create any for them. You don't have to spend anything for them. But why does your hospital administrator want to destroy their jobs? He is not helping to create new jobs, so why is he destroying already existing ones?

There is an insistent public demand for more jokes here. So I am resuming them, depending on available jokes (preferably polite ones) I get from the e-mail, from text messages, or heard at coffee shops. They will no longer be Erap jokes or Gloria jokes but any joke that is not corny and not bastos. Here is the first one, hopefully the last of the Erap jokes:

Reporter: The punishment for plunder is lethal injection. Hindi sa kaya natatakot?

Logic 101

THERE'S THE RUBConrado
de Quiros

HERNANDO Perez says the notion that Mike Arroyo could possibly have accepted a bribe to try to change his wife's mind over her veto of a telecommunications bill is illogical. Anyone who tried to bribe the President to do so would have been wasting his time because the President cannot rescind her own veto. "There can be a veto override, but there can be no reconsideration."

Lest Perez feel smug about his fear of reasoning, let us hasten to add that he forgets one important thing. Which is that that thoroughly illogical argument was not raised by Arroyo's detractors. It was raised by Arroyo himself. He it was who first said on radio, apparently to defend himself against text messages that said he took a bribe on a bill, that a presidential secretary had accepted a bribe to try to change his wife's mind. That must suggest that either he himself did not know the law that a President cannot rescind her own veto or he believed there were no laws in this country that could stand up to resolute massaging.

If the first, then that might explain why he himself might have thought he could get the President to do it. If the second, well, he would have been right: few laws in this country are impervious to tinkering. Miriam Defensor-Santiago, champion of the Constitution, as she put it in her campaign ad, was not beyond deluding herself and the country into thinking an agreement was the same thing as a treaty during the VFA debate. Perez himself has suggested the legal loophole there: a veto can be overridden, even if it cannot be reconsidered. Which means the persuading would have been done in Congress, possibly with help from Malacañang.

In any case, who says greedy people are logical? Power has been known to addle the brain, and absolute power to addle it absolutely. First Gentlemen, like First Ladies, have been known in the end to remember only that they are supposed to be first, and not gentlemen—or ladies.

A friend pointed this out to me: President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo missed a terrific opportunity to really unite this country when she delivered her Sona last week. Of course she called on the politicians to declare a truce on politicking or bickering for at least a year, and throw their shoulders behind government's program to bring this country back on its feet. That was a great pitch, challenging the a private individual, who worked quietly with ink in hand and hope in heart to keep the fires of freedom alive. They never had a President extolling their virtues and lauding them as among the things that helped monumentally to improve the state of the nation.

Not even some current public officials who have distinguished themselves since they were appointed to their posts. Not Raul Roco whose efforts to rid one of the country's most corrupt departments of scalawags and plain thieves has met with vigorous nods from the business and NGO communities alike, from rich and poor alike. I agree with Peter Wallace on that. Neither has Dinky Soliman, despite being indefatigable as social welfare secretary, and showing the world it is possible for a public official to take her job seriously.

The one person to get that signal and extraordinary honor is Bañez.

What signal and extraordinary thing has he done? Nothing. He has not had a signal and extraordinary stint at the BIR. He has not even had a signal and extraordinary life. Why the President would say with absolute certainty not just in public but in her first and most important policy speech that he is the man we might expect to pluck out public service from the doldrums, only she can say. Or her speechwriters. It's an obvious PR job—it pays to be malakas with the speechwriters—that found its way into nothing less than Ms Macapagal's Sona.

You wonder if the rest of the speech isn't just PR too. Logically.

"It's the economy, stupid," the opposition says. Or words to that effect. The economy is in terrible shape. That is the true state of the nation.

Well, who in God's name made it so? I can agree that Ms Macapagal hasn't done much to make things better. But she has only been half a year behind the wheel, they were two and a half years there. Who made Lucio Tan et al. the lords of humankind, bending all the country's laws for them? Who put gangsters in charge of government so that we looked at one point like an underworld state? Who made corruption and abuse and plain rotteness the hallmarks of rule they drove not just investors but Filipinos themselves away from the country?

It ain't the economy, it's you, stupid. Some people should really take up Logic 101.

Rodrigo's 'Napag-alaman ko' constitutes hearsay

I READ with interest, like many other citizens, the statement made by Veronics "Bing" Rodrigo over the radio a week and a half ago, and reprinted in the Inquirer's front page yesterday, where she answered the allegation aired by First Gentleman Mike Arroyo. The latter had said earlier that an unnamed Palace secretary, who had resigned, may have been the one who profited from the telecommunications franchises, not himself, contrary to text messages all around. Rodrigo said she felt alluded to, as she was the only secretary to resign, and she hit back.

But what I found interesting was that Rodrigo twice used the phrase "napag-alaman ko" in accusing Arroyo and three other unnamed people close to Arroyo, of having received a big sum of money. Said she: "... Napag-alaman ko na ang mga taong kasangkot sa deal na ita ay sa Ginoong Mike Arroyo, at isang ay business partner of Ginoong Arroyo. Napag-alaman ko rin na malaking halaga ng pera ang tinggap nila..."

To me, the clue in Rodrigo's well-crafted statement are the words "napag-alaman ko." As any Tagalog knows—Rodrigo is from Bulacan, like her respected father, Sen. Soc Rodrigo—the phrase "napag-alaman ko" translates to "I got information" or "I heard." This is not the same as saying "alam ko," which translates to "I know for a fact." In other words, Rodrigo never said she knows for sure or has direct knowledge that Arroyo got the bribe. There is a world of difference between the two. In the case of "napag-alaman ko," therefore, this becomes hearsay. In her statement, in fact, she was obviously more emphatic and categorical in stressing her innocence of any wrongdoing.

It is interesting to find out what Rodrigo is going to tell the Senate blue ribbon committee or the Ombudsman, to which President Macapagal has endorsed her husband's case for investigation. But for now, based on her one and only statement, Rodrigo's story is hearsay.

***

I've talked to a lot of people about the Mike Arroyo case. Some say they don't believe it for one good reason: why should Arroyo get bribe money from two known Erap associates, Jaime Dichaves and Pacifico Marcelo? Is Arroyo's case, argue the observers, there are many ways to raise money, if that's what he's after; why should he choose Dichaves who was such a close crony of Erap that he was willing to claim the Jose Velarde account just to get Erap off the hook?

POLITICAL TIDBITS

Belinda Olivares-Cunanan

Surely Arroyo would realize that Dichaves could be laying a trap for him. The observers note that even then Speaker and now Quezon City Mayor Sonny Belmonte was wary of the franchise grant as he told Presidential Legislative Liaison Office chief Gabby Claudio to ignore his intercession note which got to the latter.

Stacked up against the hearsay information offered by Rodrigo that Arroyo allegedly received the bribe are several facts. One is Rodrigo's admission that she accompanied Maia Nuñez, a supposed consultant of the Department of Transportation and Communications, to see Claudio, to follow up on the status of the franchise bills. It would be good to find out who is Nuñez's principal; she has since flown to the United States. Then there are the admissions of Transportation Secretary Pantaleon Alvarez, PLLC's Claudio and President Macapagal herself, that Mike Arroyo never talked to them about the franchises; conversely, Marcelo's company denied any bribe was ever made. There's also the fact that the two franchise bills were vetoed by President Macapagal late last April. If Mike really got a bribe to have those bills approved, he certainly loused it up.

By the way, a male colleague has proposed that perhaps Sen. Tito Sotto, who chaired the franchise committee in the last Congress that sponsored those franchise bills, ought to explain who are the people behind those corporations. Were they his friends?

***

Even though Rodrigo has claimed that she had only heard ("napag-alaman") of Arroyo's involvement, the opposition in the Senate, led by Minority Leader Nene Pimentel, as well as some media, has more than insinuated that Arroyo is guilty. "Alam na ni Presidente hung sinu-sinu ang kasamang alay," says Pimentel, adding that "mag-silip-in the blanks na lang kasi." Sen. Blas Ople, who never uttered a word in the Senate impeachment trial of Erap, except to say "No" to the opening of the second envelop, has been exercising his vocal cords to the hilt with threats about unleashing the "gun of August." The opposition gloated on radio that Ms Macapagal's government won't last the year.

A reader noted that by contrast, a lot of direct testimony has been made against recently elected Sen. Panfilo Lacson, including some awfully strong statements by our courageous colleague Mon Tufo; but not a squeak has been heard from the opposition senators about it. Moreover, those senators, who were then with Erap four-square—Pimentel, Angara, Ople, Sotto—never uttered a word in the face of Erap's alleged plunder of billions which they knew about. Pimentel seems to have become quite bitter after he failed to get Ms Macapagal's bucking to be retained as Senate president.

Ms Macapagal has asked the Ombudsman to investigate her husband, while the opposition wants the blue ribbon committee to go ahead with it. Obviously the opposition will milk the case dry, in the hope that Rodrigo would become Ms Macapagal's Chavit Singson. Let's have the investigation and finish it fast; if Mike Arroyo is guilty of receiving a bribe, let him hang. It's worse that the nation's attention is being diverted from the very real and far more serious problems such as our stagnating economy.

Over Cecile Alvarez's d2RH anti-poverty program which I join every Sunday evening, National Anti-Poverty Commission convenor Ging Quintos-Deles spoke about the government's program to generate jobs immediately, to crank up the economy and alleviate poverty. There's the emergency employment program for the national capital region, with the Department of Interior and Local Government as lead agency. Under this plan, hundreds of out of school youths, chosen from the poorest families in the metropolis, are being hired twice a week to do various jobs, from cleaning exteriors and interiors to fixing schoolhouses. Deles pointed out that a counterpart program for the rural countryside is the implementation of the Agriculture and Fisheries Modernization Program, passed in the Ramos era but left unfunded in Erap's term. She stressed that P20 billion will be allocated to help, among other things, generate a million jobs in the countryside up to the year 2004.

I told Deles my concerns, doubtless shared by many citizens: that the job generation will not be confined to just the politicians' followers, and that the huge amounts of money being allocated should not be squandered on ghost projects.

War room

KRIS-CROSSING MINDANAO

Carlos Isagani T. Zarate

WE are now becoming accustomed (again) to one of the current "in" words following President Macapagal's first State of the Nation Address: the "war room." Not only does it bring to mind the Cinemax documentary of the presidential campaign team that propelled Bill Clinton into power, it also evokes images of an action-oriented and surgically precise way of addressing problems.

Apparently, the Macapagal "war room" was in response to Armando Doronila's suggestion for the setting up of an operations center to monitor the progress of the President's promises in his Sona.

Its announcement also came after Congress announced the creation of a special oversight committee to closely monitor if the President's target programs were all talk or not. Not to be outdone, people's organizations and civil society groups led by Bayan Muna also declared the creation of a parallel "people's war room" with the same purpose.

This "war-room" approach is not entirely new; it has always been part of the government's curative measures, metamorphosing from one form to another: task forces, Cabinet clusters, infrastructure centers, steering committees, etc. But after several well-funded "war rooms" repeatedly made and then disbanded by past administrations, sadly, our country still faces the same decades-old problems.

Mindanao itself save several versions of "war rooms" that have evolved to supposedly address the problems that have spawned conflicts and untold miseries among its inhabitants. With almost the same result: millions, if not billions of pesos in resources poured, yet Mindanao remains "a land of promise."

During the era of migration to Mindanao, the government created the Commission on National Integration supposedly to coordinate development in Mindanao, with emphasis on bringing the Muslim and non-Muslim residents of the island into the center of the national fabric. By the time it was abolished, Mindanao was facing twin rebellions from the guerrillas of the Moro National Liberation Front and the New People's Army.

Later, the government also came up with the

COMMENTARY

Dean Jorge Bocobo

LAWYERS all over the archipelago may have been challenged last week as the Supreme Court published its new "Rules on Electronic Evidence" in the requisite two newspapers of general circulation, including the Inquirer (7/23/01, Page A4), as part of implementing the Electronic Commerce Act of 2000. Many legal practitioners may have been deterred from reading the rules completely though because, by the tyranny of alphabetical order, the very first item in the Definition of Terms was for "asymmetric or public cryptosystems." This topic is more properly tackled in a graduate math class and definitely unexpected in a Supreme Court en banc resolution.

Cryptosystem, the Supreme Court proceeded to define as, (don't hold your breath) "a system capable of generating a secure key pair, consisting of a private key for creating a digital signature, and a public key for verifying the digital signature." It was actually referring to a widely accepted system of protecting the authenticity and integrity of electronic data and messages using advanced mathematical encryption techniques. But most lawyers and laymen are likely to be flummoxed by such jargon, although it might bring a smile or two, to a small tribe of mathematical specialists called prime number theorists, on whose arcane work and persistent scribbling since ancient times, such wonders as cryptography are based.

The new rules will take effect Aug. 1, and will affect all pending and future cases of litigation involving electronic documents and messages as evidence. This certainly includes the cases against Erap, in which bank records have played such a prominent part. The admissibility and weight of this body of evidence, much of it in electronic form, could decide its outcome in the end.

Many other business and personal interests are also at stake since electronic transactions are a part of many cases under litigation, now and in the future. Lawyers and their clients are scrambling just to understand the basics as laid out in the recent Supreme Court promulgation. It will take them some time to digest such basic terms as "asymmetric cryptosystems."

The vacuum in law covering electronic transactions has delayed the entry of the Philippines into the highly competitive but lucrative industries and markets that have recently powered economic prosperity in many other countries. The new Rules of Evidence are part of the implementation of the Electronic Commerce Act of 2000 (RA 8792) which seeks to fill that vacuum.

Popularity called the e-commerce law, RA 8792 became a year old this month. This landmark legislation establishes the functional equivalence of electronic documents and transactions to their paper-based counterparts. The legislation was somewhat hastily passed by Congress and signed by Erap into law in the wake of last year's Love Bug virus. Its swift passage last year was necessitated by the embarrassing lack of a basis in law upon which to prosecute the author of the Love Bug. Its surprising virulence and $10 billion in estimated damage heightened worldwide concern for protecting the integrity of transnational communications and computer networks. The law punishes crimes like computer hacking with jail and penalties. Most importantly, it lays the foundation for commercial transactions to be conducted electronically in a secure and orderly manner.

Erap signed RA 8792 two weeks before Bill Clinton signed the very same US law upon which the Philippine legislation was, shall we say, liberally patterned. How ironic. A case of the plagiarist publishing before the original author! (This is apparently allowed in law-making since no harm is done and much good instead.) So the Philippines can claim, albeit modestly to have been ahead of the United States in establishing the functional equivalence of electronic documents, signatures and transactions with their paper and ink counter-

Missing newspaper jumps and sections

YOU push your coffee cup aside and get ready to enjoy the day's copy of the Inquirer. The headline of a news report on the front page catches your attention.

A few paragraphs later, and just when your curiosity has been whetted, the report is cut short and a page number appears to indicate the page where the rest of it can be read.

You quickly move to that page and check the heads to pick up where you left off. To your surprise, you find there is nothing on that page that has anything to do with the article you want to read.

So what do you do? You leaf through the other pages looking for the continuation.

After two or three page turns, you discover that the page where the article is supposed to have "jumped" is on a different page. Sometimes, the continuation is nowhere to be found in the newspaper.

You can only shake your head in dismay. You wonder if the person responsible for the error was sleepy or had other things in mind when he went over the draft pages of the newspaper.

A similar feeling is felt by readers who eagerly look forward to reading their favorite sections, only to find out, after paying for the newspaper, that the object of their patronage is not included in the set they bought or, if they are, the copy lacks some pages.

When they go back to the newspaper vendor to ask for the missing sections, they are told that the Inquirer either did not deliver the sections concerned or, if it did, were insufficient. The reader can only suffer in silence and make do with the sections of the newspaper given to him.

Although complaints about missing sections or inaccurate jump pages have not reached serious proportions, I felt it was time to get some explanation from the people concerned about these problems.

Proofreading

The responsibility of making sure the correct jump page is indicated at the end of the story rests with the editorial assistants. After the senior editors have cleaned up the drafts of the important news of the day and decided on their positioning on the proper pages, the editorial assistants take over to see to it that these decisions are correctly implemented.

The editorial assistants are supposed to check, double-check and triple-check the arrangement of the articles and the pages where they are continued if they cannot be accommodated in one page.

Although the principal tools used in the performance of this task are the old reliable pair of eyes, the facilities of modern computer technology are available at the editorial room to assist the editorial assistants do their job under deadline pressure.

Human as they are, editorial assistants inevitably commit errors or lapses. Once in a while, the continuation of a story winds up on a page other than that indicated at the bottom of the story.

Or the continuation does not appear anywhere else in the newspaper. In other words, the subject article is left hanging and the reader is left in the dark on the information that has been mysteriously withheld from him by some unknown soul at the editorial room.

These errors happen when last-minute changes are made on the stories, like when a story that was originally planned to come out at a certain page and is continued elsewhere is removed to give way to a more important article.

With the deadline to release the final draft of the newspaper fast closing in, the editorial assistant may forget to check if the continuation of the earlier story had been removed and the new story's jump is placed on the vacated space.

If there is sensational late-breaking news that requires emptying portions of the jump page to accommodate the rest of the news, the required change in the continuation page of the news that was yanked out may not be made due to time constraints.

As always, those mistakes will be discovered the following day. Either by the editors who go through the pages with a fine-toothed comb every day or readers who must have been proofreaders in their previous lives.

Printing blues

With regard to the missing sections of the newspaper, I learned that only Section "A" (which consists of, among others, the front page, Second Front Page and Across the Nation) and Metro and Business sections are printed the night before the issue is released to the public.

The rest of the sections (like Entertainment and Lifestyle) are printed during the daytime or from morning till 7 p.m. of the same day. After 7 p.m., the presses are cleaned in time to handle the three sections mentioned earlier.

The printing press has been configured in such a way that once a set of sections is completed, it comes out neatly arranged and bundled and ready for transfer to the trucks that will deliver them to their respective dealers.

No manual count of the number of sections or pages printed is done at all because that task is left to the press to perform through some complex internal mechanism.

The bundled sections are dropped off at the dealers' designated stations. The dealers sort out the bundles and collate individual sets consisting of as many sections as there may be for a particular issue, with Sunday having the biggest number of sections.

The newspaper sets are immediately sent to the newsstands or houses of regular patrons. The sorting and delivery have to be done real quick. Any delay in delivery may result in the reader buying another newspaper that is already available at the stand or the regular patron looking for another delivery boy who can put his copy at his doorstep at the earliest time possible.

It is in the process of sorting out and putting the newspaper in one set that the problem of "missing" sections arise. In the haste to collate the sections, more than one copy of a section is sometimes pulled out and placed in a set. This is specially true in sections that consists of four pages only; they are so thin that it is difficult to determine by touch if more than one copy has been set aside.

By the time the sorting reaches the end of the pile, the sets will be lacking in sections that had more than one copy placed in the sets. Under pressure to deliver the sets immediately, the newspaper boys often hesitate to go through their pile all over again to find out which sets had more than one copy of a particular section. The sets just have to delivered to their patrons without delay.

Unlucky is the reader who gets a newspaper set that happened to be at the end of the pile when the sorting of sections was made. He has to make do with whatever sections the newspaper boy sorted out and collated for him.

In last week's column, I wrote that Danny Mariano is a columnist of the Star. I was wrong. He writes for Today. My apologies.

CHINESE President Jiang Zemin (right) meets with US Secretary of State Colin Powell at the Great Hall of the People in Beijing July 28. Powell, the highest-level US official to visit China during the Bush administration, visited Beijing to try to overcome six months of strained Sino-US relations.

US explores 'space bomber'

WASHINGTON—The Pentagon is exploring development of a futuristic "space bomber" that could destroy targets on the other side of the world in half an hour, according to a newspaper report.

The Los Angeles Times wrote Saturday that the proposed bomber, possibly manned, would blast off like a long-range missile and could drop precision bombs from heights of 60 miles or more.

Advocates say such a bomber could strike key targets, but would remain out of reach of conventional air defenses.

One major drawback, however, is that the project could also intensify the growing international debate over the militarization of space.

A document issued by Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld directed the Pentagon last month to look into "sub-orbital space vehicles" that "would be valuable for conducting rapid global strikes," according to the Times.

The Rumsfeld paper, called "Guidance and Terms of Reference for the 2001 Quadrennial Defense Review," offers guidance for the military officials planning the road map for the reforms in US defense that Rumsfeld hopes to make.

Traveling 15 times faster than current heavy bombers and soaring 10 times higher, the weapon would have the capacity to destroy distant targets while allowing for a smaller and less vulnerable US military.

Powell says visit soothed tensions

BEIJING—US Secretary of State Colin Powell on Sunday left Beijing convinced he had made important progress in soothing recent antagonism tearing at fragile Sino-US relations.

Powell left on his US military jet for Australia, the final leg of a five-nation Asia-Pacific tour, following an intense day of talks Saturday with top Chinese leaders including President Jiang Zemin.

While no major breakthroughs were evident, the consultations appeared to tilt the crucial relationship between the world's sole superpower and its most populous nation away from the storms of the first six months of President George Bush's administration.

Powell told reporters Saturday that the route to easier relations was through frank discussions of the many disagreements between the two sides.

"We are reaching out and building on the areas of common interest and where we have disagreements, not shrinking from those disagreements, not saying they don't exist but facing them and talking about them," he said.

Powell, the most senior Bush official to visit China so far, left with agreements from Beijing to renew a human rights dialogue and to set up an experts' committee to discuss US fears over its missile technology exports.

That was in line with expectations in both capitals before the visit, that given the huge volume of disagreements on human rights, missile defense, and Taiwan that only small steps forward were likely.

Powell said he was certain that the diplomatic crisis sparked when an American EP-3 spyplane and a Chinese jet collided over the South China Sea in April had finally been consigned to history.

"With respect to the EP-3—that is behind us," said Powell.

The focus in the relationship is now expected to shift to Bush's planned visit to Shanghai for the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation forum in Shanghai in October and subsequent state visit to Beijing.

Powell promised "no holds barred" discussions right away on human rights, but gave no details of where the sessions would take place.

"We plan to talk about all the human rights issues that are of concern to us—we expect them to do the same," he said.

China improved the atmosphere of the Powell talks by freeing US-based scholars Gao Zhan and Qin Guangguang on medical parole Thursday, days after they were sentenced to 10 years in jail for spying for Taiwan.

Powell on Saturday avoided mentioning individual human rights cases, a tactic, which has enraged Chinese leaders in the past.

"I was more interested in raising the whole issue of human rights and the rule of law and treating people properly," he said, in remarks sure to disappoint activists who wanted him to present a list of detainees.

Report: US named Reds to Indonesia in 1960s purge

WASHINGTON—Indonesian authorities used lists of names prepared by the US Embassy in Jakarta during the bloody purge of Indonesia's communist party in the 1960s, according to State Department documents released by a university here despite CIA attempts to suppress them, university officials said in a statement.

The documents, published by George Washington University's National Security Archive, contain "significant new documentation" on the purge, one of the darkest and least explained chapters of the 20th century, university officials said in a statement.

The documents describe an airmail sent Aug. 10, 1966 by

Marshall Green, then the US ambassador to Indonesia, stating that a list of leaders of the Indonesia Communist Party (PKI) prepared by the embassy "is apparently being used by Indonesian security authorities who seem to lack even the simplest overt information on PKI leadership at this time."

The documents reveal that on Dec.

2, 1965, Green endorsed a $50 million coup payment to the movement leading the repression against the communists, the statement said.

All the documents, included in official State Department histories of Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Greece, Turkey and Cyprus from 1964-1968, were declassified in 1998 and 1999. But the State Department and CIA have blocked their release, according to the statement.

However, the volume on Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines, part of the prestigious series "Foreign Relations of the United States," was sent to the non-governmental archive by the government printing office, apparently by error.

Estimates of the number of Indonesians killed by soldiers and fellow citizens in the 1960s range from 100,000 to one million.

The purge accompanied the 1965 rise to power of Suharto, who toppled Indonesia's first president, Sukarno and ruled with an iron fist until 1998.

Documentation of US involvement in the murky events of the mid-1960s comes at a delicate time since Sukarno's daughter, Megawati Sukarnoputri, was named Indonesia's new president on Monday.

Koizumi seeks reform mandate at Diet polls

TOKYO—Japan went to the polls Sunday with the personal popularity of reform-minded Prime Minister Junichiro Koizumi expected to help his ruling coalition retain a majority in the upper house of parliament.

Polling stations across the country opened at 7 a.m. and were to close at 8 p.m., to be immediately followed by vote-counting.

Koizumi has charmed the nation with his promise of reform and populist approach, whipping up a craze befitting a superstar in the three months since he took over from his predecessor, gaffe-prone Yoshiro Mori.

But the new premier has yet to spell out his plan for "structural reform" of the ailing economy, amid strong resistance for changes within his Liberal Democratic Party (LDP)—an ambiguity which helped Tokyo's share prices dip to a 16-year low last Monday.

Major opinion polls have indicated the conservative LDP and its junior partners in the ruling coalition—the Buddhist-backed centrist party Komeito and the New Conservative Party—will retain majority strength in the secondary chamber of parliament. The coalition also holds a majority in the Lower House.

Currently, the three-party alliance holds 138 seats, comfortably clear of the simple majority of 124 in the House of Councilors. Of those, 77 seats are up for reelection, with 63 needed to hang on to the majority.

Elections are held every three years to elect half the upper house for six-year terms.

Fujimori ordered his ex-wife killed, former spy chief says

LIMA, Peru—Captured former spy chief Vladimiro Montesinos has told the ex-wife of disgraced former President Alberto Fujimori that the autocratic leader ordered that she be killed, her spokesperson said Saturday.

Alberto Bautista, lawyer and adviser to Congresswoman Susana Higuchi, said they visited Montesinos at his residence Friday at the naval prison, where he is being held on dozens of charges ranging from narcotics trafficking to directing a paramilitary death squad.

"Montesinos asked Susana forgiveness for all the harm he has done her," Bautista told The Associated Press. He said Montesinos told Higuchi that Fujimori "ordered her eliminated, but to make it look like an accident."

But he added that Montesinos claimed "that he is very Catholic and that he would not permit an order to murder."

"He admits that committed crimes and that he has to be tried and judged, but that he never killed and never trafficked in narcotics," Bautista said. "He said everything he did was on the direct orders of Alberto Fujimori."

Higuchi has accused Montesinos, who was captured last month in Venezuela, of driving a wedge between her family, holding her captive and ordering his agents to torture her.

Bautista also said Montesinos provided information about where Fujimori allegedly holds secret bank accounts, but declined to elaborate.

Fujimori has denied his ex-wife's allegation that he deposited some $12.5 million from Japanese donors meant for Peruvian children into a personal bank account.

Fujimori stripped Higuchi of the title of first lady in 1994 after she accused him of tolerating widespread corruption in his administration. He said she was disloyal, as well as "unstable and easily influenced" by his political rivals. Their divorce was finalized in 1996.

Higuchi was elected to Congress last year on the opposition ticket of the Independent Moralizing Front party.

Montesinos was known for years as Fujimori's "Rasputin" for the influence he wielded over the dictatorial leader, isolating Fujimori from key aides and family members. Montesinos was undone by a leaked video last year showing him bribing an opposition congressman.

Higuchi was one of the lawmakers who presented the video, which plummeted Peru into political turmoil that led to Fujimori fleeing to Japan, his parents' homeland, where he remains in self-imposed exile.

Days before he left Peru, Higuchi claimed she had been tortured on numerous occasions by order of the president and his former intelligence adviser. The allegations were never substantiated.

Probers say Milosevic tried to erase proof of atrocities

PETROVO SELO, Yugoslavia—On a grassy hill nestled in the shade of thick locust trees, 76 fresh graves contain grisly evidence that Yugoslavia and outside investigators say could be used to convict Slobodan Milosevic of crimes against humanity.

Fearing NATO would take Kosovo in 1999 and discover mass graves, Milosevic dispatched teams to dig up the bodies of ethnic Albanians killed by Yugoslav security forces in the rebellious territory and rebury them where they wouldn't be found, a Serbian government minister, a police captain and other investigative sources have told The Associated Press.

Milosevic was surrounded by men who formed a tight circle of silence around him. But authorities in today's Yugoslavia feel no obligation to protect the former president, now behind bars and awaiting trial before the UN war crimes tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands. On the contrary, they seem anxious to distance themselves from his regime.

In recent weeks they have revealed the existence of at least four mass graves in different parts of Serbia—graves that contain the tangled remains of at least 800 victims of Milosevic's brutal 1998-99 crackdown on ethnic Albanians in Kosovo.

Now, in startling detail, Serbia's new interior minister, Dusan Mihajlovic, and police Capt. Dragan Karleusa, in charge of mass grave investigations, say evidence is mounting that Milosevic ordered a cover-up in an effort to erase evidence of atrocities.

Toma Fila, Milosevic's lawyer, dismisses talk of a cover-up as "complete nonsense." But Mihajlovic, who heads the police, says, "It's clear this was a case of removing evidence of criminal acts."

Other high-ranking police officials, interviewed by the AP on condition of anonymity, say Operation Depth 2 existed and was three-pronged—exhum corpses from mass graves in Kosovo and rebury them deep in Serbia proper or dump them in the Danube; destroy other bodies in Kosovo by incineration or other means; and move some remains within Kosovo from mass graves to smaller, ordinary graves.

Karleusa says Depth 2 began within days of March 24, 1999, when NATO started its 78-day air war to punish Milosevic for his crackdown on independence-minded ethnic Albanians in Kosovo, a campaign that killed at least 8,000 people.

Karleusa says Milosevic summoned top police and military officers to his White Palace in Belgrade's plush Dedinje District to convey his concerns about his regime's crimes in Kosovo.

Karleusa did not attend the meeting, but since Milosevic's ouster, he and the other police officials say they have reconstructed what happened there.

The officials say that Lt. Gen. Vlastimir Djordjevic, then deputy interior minister and no relation to the Danube diver, expressed alarm that "the NATO aggressors" would discover what Serb forces had done to ethnic Albanian civilians.

Milosevic, the officials said, was brisk and to the point. The terrain would have to be cleaned up, and quickly.

The top security brass needed no further explanation. They knew what Milosevic meant. Mass graves in Kosovo contain the remains of ethnic Albanians—and the bodies of those yet to be killed by Serb forces during the coming NATO airstrikes—had to be dug up and taken as far as possible from Kosovo.

That or be destroyed beyond recognition.

Jewish extremists defy Arabs

JERUSALEM—A small group of ultra-nationalist Jews briefly laid a symbolic cornerstone for a new Jewish temple in Jerusalem on Sunday in a ceremony that went peacefully, despite fears of Israeli Palestinian clashes.

"The ceremony went off without incident," Jerusalem police spokesman Shmuel Ben Ruby told AFP.

"About a dozen members of the Temple Mount Faithful brought the stone by truck to the outside of the Old City. They conducted a brief ceremony of several minutes and then the truck took the stone away," he added.

The tiny Temple Mount and Land of Israel Patriarch Movement won approval from Israel's Supreme Court on Wednesday to lay the 4.5 ton stone at one of the gates of the Old City, near the ruins of the historic Second Temple.

But the court denied the group permission to lay the stone on the Temple Mount itself, the sacred Jewish site which is also home to the third holiest place in Islam, the Al Aqsa mosque compound.

Israeli police were out in force fearing a potentially bloody showdown over the ceremony, which had triggered fury throughout the Arab world and calls for Palestinians to turn out in force to block the Israeli group.

The Temple Mount Faithful later tried to enter the compound itself but were blocked by police, a decision the group's leader, Gershon Salomon said was a cave-in by Israel, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon.

"The police and Ariel Sharon are scared of Arab threats . . . but the day of the building of the temple is drawing near," he shouted through a megaphone.

I hope this momentous celebration will promote greater camaraderie and professional excellence among its members.

In the era of greater global convergence, the movement of people and cargo through sea transportation must be done in a safe and efficient manner to further facilitate our nation's progress. We must strengthen the country's capabilities for maritime transportation and commerce to enhance its role as a major transshipment point in Asia. By ensuring the safety of countless travelers and promoting professional excellence in piloting, you are helping our country win the opportunities for growth and development in the global economy.

I hope this momentous occasion will inspire the MPAC to persevere in the mission to provide the highest standards of skill and care in piloting. Join me in steering the nation towards greater peace, progress and prosperity.

Berroya demands inventory of cars seized by Lacson men

BY TONETTE OREJAS
PDI Central Luzon Desk

CAMP OLIVAS, Pampanga—Whatever happened to cars seized during anti-illegal drug operations under former Philippine National Police Chief Panfilo Lacson? Did they end up in the hands of car syndicates?

Four of such cars have been hidden in a police barracks in Pampanga since February last year, according to Senior Supt. Reynaldo Berroya, Central Luzon Police Director and former Chief of the PNP Intelligence Unit.

Convicted drug trafficker Li Ka Kim, William Chu and Rafael Madrazo have each been sentenced to life imprisonment and a P1-million fine.

But the cars, which formed part of the evidence against them, have not been turned over to the courts or were forfeited by the government, Berroya said.

Initial investigation showed that Senior Supt. Francisco Villaroman, former chief of the PNP's Criminal Investigation and Detection Group in Central Luzon and a Lacson appointee here, brought the cars to Pampanga when he assumed the assignment in February this year.

Senior Insp. Julieto Culili of the CIDG said in an affidavit that Villaroman headed the teams that arrested Li and Madrazo in Paranaque City and Chu in Marikina City, court documents obtained by a Camp Olivas investigating team showed.

Culili said seven cars were originally hidden at the provincial mobile group's building in Barangay San Felipe, City of San Fernando. All seven cars were hidden in the building's first floor.

At a still unknown date, Villaroman took three cars. It was not known where these cars are now.

Culili claimed the cars were submitted to the courts as evidence.

"If these were presented as evidence, why should they hide them? If these were being preserved as evidence, why were these not given to the courts prior to the conviction of the drug traffickers? Why were these hidden in Pampanga where Villaroman was assigned? Why did he not just leave them at Narcom?" Berroya asked.

The policy is that sets of evidence are proper documents, kept in custody and submitted when the court begins hearing the case, he said.

Li's car, with plate number WOX 207, was ordered forfeited in favor of the government. It remained in the barracks. A check with the Land Transportation Office showed that the car is registered under one William Sy.

The plate of Chu's Toyota Corolla numbered UHE 156 is registered to another vehicle.

The owner of a Toyota car with plate number TRF 273 and which was found in the possession of Madrazo, is still being established.

The four cars are now secured by troops from the Regional Mobile Group.

In 1999, Villaroman accused former PNP chief Roberto Lastimosa of covering traffickers, including Madrazo who was arrested in March 1999 and convicted last February.

Berroya on Thursday disclosed to Pampanga reporters the initial results of the weeklong investigation of the case after Villaroman reportedly went on radio clearing himself of any wrongdoing.

Villaroman reportedly accused Berroya of harboring a personal grudge against Lacson, now an opposition senator.

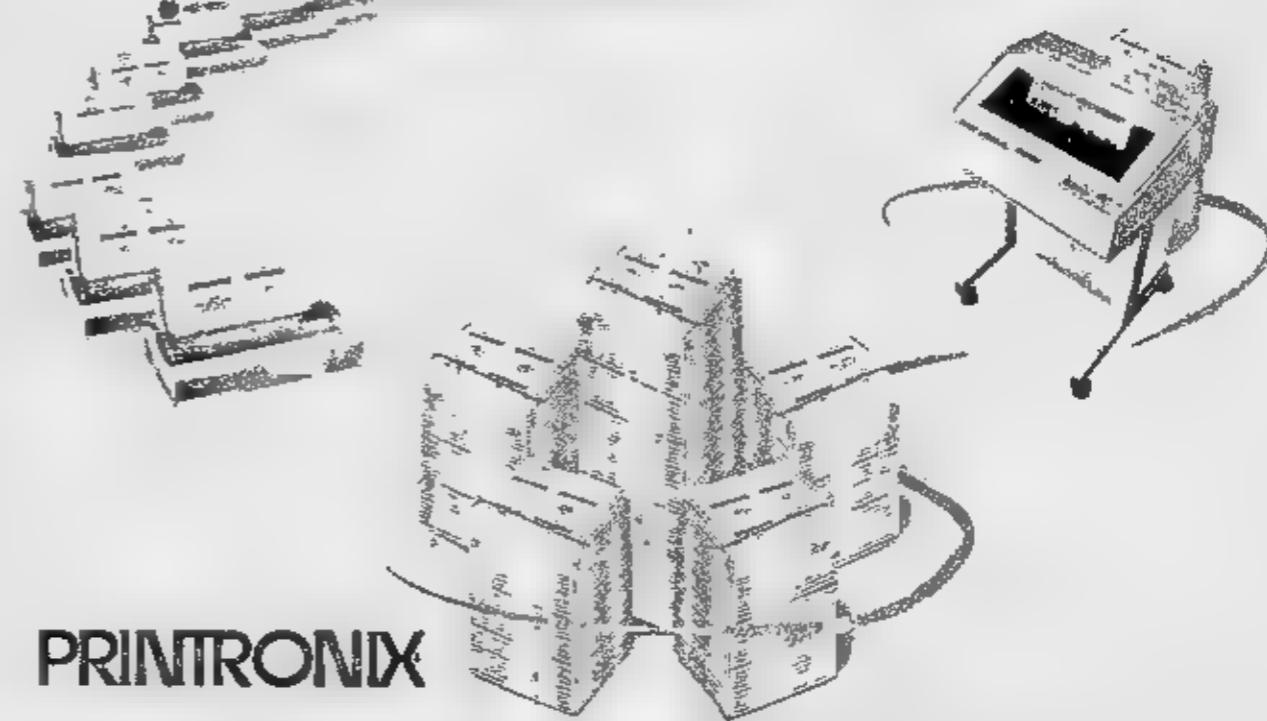

It was also Berroya who asked the Department of Justice early this year to investigate the alleged $500 million secret bank account of Lacson in the United States.

Published reports quoted intelligence reports as saying that Lacson allegedly enriched himself through payoffs from illegal drugs and kidnap-for-ransom activities allegedly done by the Presidential Anti-Crime Commission and the Presidential Anti-Organized Crime Task Force. Lacson used to head these groups.

Police appeals to PMA

BAGUIO CITY—Police here are asking the Philippine Military Academy to release to their custody a certified academy marksman accused of shooting and wounding a policeman on July 12. The PMA has kept Army Sgt. Amador Manalastas in its custody since July 13 after he was suspected of shooting PDI Rogelio Bilibi. Police said Bilibi responded to a complaint by a taxicab driver, who felt threatened by a pistol he saw bulging in Manalastas' shirt. But Manalastas claimed he shot Bilibi in self-defense after the police officer pulled a gun at him. Vincent Cabreza and Toots Soberano, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

More troops to Tapaz

KALIBO, Aklan—The Philippine Army on Friday reinforced its troops in Tapaz, Capiz after the July 4 clash in Barangay Bagongbaryo of the town that led to the killing of a rebel leader, said Lt. Col. Lysander Suerte, commander of the Army's 12th Infantry Battalion based in Banga, Aklan. Slain on July 4 was Rogelio Canonero, who was said to have led a group of rebels collecting revolutionary taxes from villagers when they clashed with soldiers who acted on reports about the rebels' presence in the area. It was not known if other rebels were wounded in the fight. No casualty was reported on the government side.

5 drug pushers nabbed

COTABATO CITY—Police and Narcotics agents separately arrested five suspected illegal drug pushers in North Cotabato. Police in Kabacan, North Cotabato arrested on Wednesday Dagabanan Saman, a carinderia owner, for alleged possession of shabu following a buy-bust operation. Two other suspected drug pushers from Davao City were arrested in Kabacan town on Tuesday. In Kidapawan City, police also arrested suspected shabu pushers, brothers Abdul and Sumara Batungkar, on Friday.

Brothers rob bus

KIDAPAWAN CITY—Three brothers robbed a passenger bus in Makilala, North Cotabato on Tuesday morning. The suspects were identified as brothers Juanito, Romeo and Edison Adolfo, of Mindul in Davao City. Bus conductor Fernando Gesulga said the three boarded the bus in Makilala, Cotabato, about seven kilometers from where they announced a robbery. The suspects, who were later arrested, were armed with two .38 caliber revolvers.

Nur says Palace dividing MNLF

COTABATO CITY—A beleaguered Nur Misuari, who still insists he wields power and influence over a divided Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF), claimed President Macapagal-Arroyo's intelligence network as unreliable and divisive.

Misuari was reacting to an alleged Malacañang "demolition move," to oust him as MNLF chair by endorsing the so-called 15-member MNLF executive council as his replacement.

He challenged the Palace intelligence group to prove their findings that the 15-member MNLF executive council under Dr. Parok Hussein is stronger and has the "security risk potentials" compared to the Misuari-led MNLF.

"Why not send your best intelligence outfit and conduct your survey," said Misuari, who just received a fresh mandate from Dima Ambil, head of the MNLF Sebangan Kutawato State Revolutionary Committee.

Earlier, Parok claimed that all MNLF state chairs in Mindanao have pledged their support to the executive council.

Misuari, in his meeting on Thursday with MNLF commanders and committee chairpersons in Davao City, blamed Presidential Adviser Norberto Gonzales for the MNLF mess.

He said it was Gonzales' group in Malacañang that was sowing intrigues in the MNLF.

"To divide us is not the correct method to implement the 1996 peace agreement," Misuari said.

Cebu party-list groups plan appeal

BY JHUNNEX NAPALLACAN
PDI Visayas Bureau

CEBU CITY—The party-list groups Promdi and the Cocofed-Philippine Coconut Producers Federation Inc. said they would file separate motions for reconsideration before the Commission on Elections to question their disqualification in the May 14 elections.

Party-list Representative-elect Joy Augustin Young of Promdi and official Emerto Calderon of Cocofed said the recommendation of the Comelec to disqualify their groups was unfair to the people who voted for their groups in the last elections.

Young and Calderon, both from Cebu, represented their respective party-list group in the last Congress.

Young would have returned to the House of Representatives because Promdi garnered 2.8 percent of the total votes cast for party-list groups last May 14.

Young said Promdi would also file a separate manifestation before the Supreme Court to show that the group truly represents a marginalized sector.

He said the Comelec should not have likened Promdi to other political groups that joined the party-list elections because it represents a sector of provincial dwellers who espouse the "province first" ideology and is not a national political party like the Lakas-NUCD or the Nationalist People's Coalition.

He said they could not understand why Promdi was accredited by the Comelec only to be disqualified when the elections were already over.

Calderon said he was surprised that Cocofed was disqualified as a party-list group since it represents coconut farmers nationwide, "a marginalized and underrepresented sector in our society."

Calderon also said he believed the Cocofed still has a chance to win a seat in Congress if his group would not be included in the list of disqualified party-list organizations.

Cocofed ranked number 15 and garnered 1.8 percent of the votes cast for party-list groups last May 14.

He said that of the votes cast for other party-list groups that were disqualified would no longer be counted, that would bring up the standing of Cocofed, giving the group a "big chance" to acquire the 2 percent needed for the organization to keep its seat in Congress.

SUBSIDY FOR THE POOR GMA lied on NFA, says union head

BAGUIO CITY—President Macapagal Arroyo did not tell the truth about her much-publicized welfare-style subsidy for the country's poor, an official of the National Food Authority employees association said.

Bobby Quinto, president of the NFA employees association here, said Ms Macapagal had taken credit for a new rice subsidy plan designed for the country's 100 poorest families "without telling (Filipinos) that she is simply reducing a government subsidy that helped all of the country's poor."

Quinto was reacting to the NFA's "Tindahan ni Gloria Labandera" program, which offers subsidized rice exclusively to "poor families" accredited by the Department of Social Welfare and Development.

Tindahan, which was originally named the "GMA Store," replaced the "ERAP Rolling Stones" of ousted President Joseph Estrada.

Ms Macapagal, who was social welfare secretary under the Estrada administration, referred to the plan as one of her key platform projects in her State of the Nation Address (Sona) last Monday.

She promised to lift all government controls over rice importation in compliance with the terms of a deregulation plan called the Grains Sector Development Program (GSDP), which was devised by the Estrada Cabinet in December last year.

Accredited families are supplied with a state-controlled passbook each which allows them to withdraw their rice supplies in the same manner the United States' welfare food stamps allow beneficiaries to obtain their food subsidy. Quinto said.

But Quinto claimed that Ms Macapagal is using the same controversial list prepared by local politicians who rushed their "poorest families" directory to tip Estrada's pro-poor funds.

"This is really a follow-through for the country's commitment to the GSDP, which guides (the) government (toward the) NFA's eventual abolition. She is continuing a program, which ransoms $175 million in loans held hostage by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) last year. They were supposed to release a first tranche of about $30 million last year because Estrada's administration agreed to abolish NFA," he said during a People's Summit here Monday.

The NFA employees pointed out that the first tranche of the ADB fund was never released.

The GSDP was formulated by former Secretaries Edgardo Angara of agriculture, Edgardo Espiritu of finance, Benjamin Diokno of budget and by the National Economic and Development Authority last year.

Its basic provision requires the diminution of NFA's control over rice importation to open up the country's rice trade.

"We NFA employees want the poor to realize (that the Macapagal rice subsidy is not pro-poor) because we want a clear, untarnished fashion (through which) this government (could) address poverty," Quinto told the Inquirer.

He said Ms Macapagal would likely pursue NFA's abolition, because "her government needs to sell off government agencies and corporations to make money for (a heavily bankrupt) government."

"We are asking the public and the country's poor to support our fight against NFA privatization. The NFA is the only safety net left against global rice trade," Quinto said. Vincent Cabrea, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

Pampanga execs seek state of calamity in 51 flooded villages

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO, Pampanga—Due to floods that continue to submerge 51 villages in Pampanga for almost a month now, a board member and two municipal mayors urged provincial officials to place the fourth district of the province under a state of calamity.

Board Member Nestor Tolentino said declaring his district as a calamity area would enable the provincial government here to release funds for relief operations for the flood victims.

The Provincial Disaster Coordinating Council said 105 families in nearby Sto. Tomas town had been evacuated to the San Matias Elementary School due to floods that have reached five feet in some areas.

Emmanuel Guanlao, PDCC executive director, said the flooded villages are located in the towns of Apalit, Minalin, Macabebe and Sto. Tomas and in the capital city.

He said floods in low-lying areas in Pampanga have been aggravated by the almost daily afternoon heavy rains in the province. Tolentino said without a formal declaration of a state of calamity, the provincial government could not extend financial assistance to the submerged towns in the district.

"Our people really need help now. The poor towns of our district could not support themselves. They need the capital's help," he said.

"Our budget for relief goods and other related expenses is not enough. The number of flooded areas continues to increase. We need the support of the province," said Sto. Tomas Mayor Lucas Arcos.

Minalin Mayor Edgar Flores said the intervention of the provincial and national governments is needed to evacuate and feed the flood victims during the rainy season.

The Sto. Rita portion of the Sto. Tomas-Minalin-San Fernando dike was breached last month, causing floodwater to enter some villages in Sto. Tomas. Jan Malig, PDI Central Luzon Desk

ARMM plebiscite pushed

ZAMBOANGA CITY—Rep. Celso Lobregat said the scheduled plebiscite on the proposed expansion of the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM) on Aug. 14 should not be postponed.

Mohammedin Ajihil, executive assistant of the Southern Philippines Council for Peace and Development (SPCPD), earlier said ARMM Gov. Nur Misuari, who is also SPCPD chair, wants another postponement of the plebiscite.

But Lobregat said the electoral exercise had been moved three times and saw no reason why it should be postponed once more.

"The first postponement was in March 1999 which was reset to September 1999, and this was subsequently moved to another date and again was postponed to coincide with the May 2001 elections and again postponed to November," Lobregat said.

Ajihil said the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) which Misuari also chairs, believes that the plebiscite is "ill-tempered."

He further said "we will reject the plebiscite if its intention is to destroy rather than preserve the gains of the 1996 peace agreement. Do not blame us for any adverse consequences that may result from the holding of the plebiscite."

Lobregat said the Sept. 2, 1996 peace accord calls for a law that would amend RA 6744. He said RA 9054 has incorporated all the provisions of the agreement.

He said the Aug. 14 plebiscite could not be stopped.

He said he and his mother, Mayor Maria Clara Lobregat, will campaign hard so residents of the city will go out and vote "No to ARMM inclusion."

"Look now at the sorry state of the provinces under ARMM although the national government poured billion of pesos into the region, the leadership (of) Misuari did not achieve anything positive that will convince other cities and provinces to join the ARMM," said Mayor Lobregat. Jonathan Ma with a report from Julie Alipala-Inot, PDI Mindanao Bureau

Ifugao rape, abuse cases alarm gov

BY FRANK CIMATU
PDI Northern Luzon Bureau

BAGUIO CITY—Ifugao Gov. Teodoro Baguilat Jr. recalled the reason of an Ifugao pastor who raped his daughter last year. "What he said was, 'It's in the Bible: What you sow, you reap.'"

But he said the rising number of cases of sexual and reproductive health violations in his province is no laughing matter.

"From January to June this year, there were 14 cases of rape and other forms of physical abuse in Ifugao. This may be small compared to other places but we must recall that these are people, not statistics. We tend to forget that these cases involve people," Baguilat said during a nutrition and population summit here Friday.

He cited a 2000 survey conducted by the Ifugao Provincial Task Force Against Gender Violence, which showed that violations are indeed mounting.

Of 2,718 child and women respondents, 7.65 percent said they were sexually abused. About 17 percent said they were emotionally abused and 22.26 percent said they were victims of physical abuse, including snapping and kicking.

Of those abused emotionally and physically, more than 30 percent said it was their mothers who did it. 19.36 percent said it was their husbands and 13.76 percent said it was their stepfathers.

Home not safe

More than 70 percent of the victims said the incidents occurred at home.

Half of the cases were directed against mothers and 17.35 percent against fathers.

Violations directed against daughters accounted for 13.22 percent of the cases.

Baguilat said the surprising large percentage of sexual and reproductive health violations might be the result of the greater awareness of residents who report their cases to authorities rather than hide them.

"It used to be considered taboo (to report violations). If there was a problem in the family, it was usually kept there. Even the police did not consider them a crime," he said.

He also said men should be involved in reproductive health programs.

"There is low participation of men and sometimes they are ostracized. We have lots of projects targeting the wives but none for the husbands. Even the choices of contraceptives are limited for men," he said.

Midwives

When he was Kangan mayor Baguilat said he started a hilot (midwife) program for men.

"In our remote villages, the hilot were sometimes too far to attend to the pregnant wives so a large percentage of deliveries had been assisted by husbands. But when I started the hilot program, there were many husbands who were snickering," he said.

In 1994, another survey among residents of Ifugao, Palawan, South Cotabato and Pangasinan showed that religion might not be the primary factor that influences couples' attitudes toward family planning.

The survey also took in as respondents 474 local leaders including legislators, national and local government officials, non-government organization officers, media persons, academicians and businessmen.

Most respondents were Catholics while a small percentage belonged to other religious groups.

FILLING ASIA'S RICE BOWL

CHINA
2001
GOVERNMENT SERVICE

As a young plant scientist, Yuan Longping recoiled from the horror of China's great famine of the late 1950s and vowed to do something about it. Years of painstaking experimentation led, in 1974, to the world's first successful system for producing high-yielding hybrid rice on a large scale. Today, half of China's rice land is planted in Yuan's hybrids and his technology — continuously improved at his China National Hybrid Rice Research and Development Center — is spreading through Asia. This offers hope that in years ahead an ancient dream of Asia may well come true: There will be rice for everyone. The Foundation recognizes "the unique contribution of his research in rice hybridization to food security in Asia."

RESTORING THE LAND

SINGH
2001
COMMUNITY
LEADERSHIP

Seeking to do good, Rajendra Singh settled in Alwar, Rajasthan, a district where a degraded environment had rendered the land barren and the people destitute. By enjoining villagers to restore and expand an ancient system of earthen reservoirs to catch the monsoon rainwater — and by guiding them to reforest their denuded watershed, Singh has restored vitality and hope to the region and strengthened its villages. In hundreds of Alwar's rural communities today, villagers are astutely managing their own resources. As a result, there are crops in the fields and water in the wells. The Foundation recognizes him for "leading Rajasthan's villagers in the steps of their ancestors to rehabilitate their degraded habitat and bring its dormant rivers back to life."

FOR WOMEN AND THE RULE OF LAW

WU
2001
PUBLIC SERVICE

A beloved professor of English, Wu Qing was elected People's Deputy to the People's Congress in her district of Beijing in 1984. Soon afterwards, she formed the Women's Studies Forum, one of China's first nongovernmental organizations. As a Deputy, Wu invoked China's Constitution to resist upon her right to hold officials accountable to the law. She served her constituents so faithfully that they reelected her four times. Meanwhile, through the Forum and other initiatives, she has placed women's issues firmly on China's agenda. The women's movement, Wu stresses, is part of China's democratic movement. The Foundation recognizes her "pioneering advocacy on behalf of women and the rule of law in the People's Republic of China."

AWARDEE for JOURNALISM, LITERATURE and CREATIVE
ARTS

A child prodigy, Amaradeva rose to become Sri Lanka's music master, composing songs for the finest films, ballets, musical dramas, and radio and television programs of his lifetime. His music reflects a unique synthesis of the country's varied heritage, combining the influences of North Indian ragas, Sinhalese folk melodies, and Portuguese waltzes and hymns, among many others. Today, his songs and his voice are touchstones of recognition and pleasure for millions of Sri Lankans. As one longtime collaborator and friend has put it, Amaradeva's music "speaks to the soul of the nation." The Foundation recognizes "his life of dazzling creativity in expression of the rich heritage and protean vitality of Sri Lankan music."

GLOBAL STEWARDSHIP

2001
AWARDEE for PEACE and INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

For years, Ikuo Hirayama visited sites along the old Silk Road to make sketches for his paintings. Alarmed by the ruin of many once-brilliant Buddhist shrines and works of art, he became an advocate for cultural preservation. Mobilizing funds and collaborators from Japan and around the world, and committing his own resources, he acted to restore the Dunhuang Caves in China and Cambodia's Angkor Wat, plus other sites in North Korea, Japan, and Afghanistan. Such treasures are the inheritance of the entire world, he says, the entire world should join in caring for them. The Foundation recognizes "his efforts to promote peace and international cooperation by fostering a common bond of stewardship for the world's cultural treasures."

A HAVEN FOR WOMEN

OUNG
CAMBODIA
2001
EMERGENT
LEADERSHIP

In Cambodia, sex trafficking and other crimes against women skyrocketed in the 1990s. Confronting this fact as a human rights worker, Oung Chanthol established the Cambodian Women's Crisis Center in 1997. Oung's center operates confidential shelters for women rescued from forced prostitution and abusive husbands and provides legal assistance, psychological counseling, literacy classes, and job training for victims of gender violence. It is documenting hundreds of cases. Meanwhile, thirty-four-year-old Oung is educating Cambodia's public and its officials and police about rape, domestic violence, and trafficking in women. And she is campaigning effectively for women's rights in the national society. The Foundation recognizes her for "rising courageously to confront and eliminate sex trafficking and gender violence in Cambodia."

A VOICE FOR LABOR

SARI INDONESIA
2001
EMERGENT
LEADERSHIP

As an underground labor organizer under the Suharto dictatorship, Dita Indah Sari called workers to strike for better wages and working conditions and helped them translate their legitimate grievances into effective political action. She was arrested, beaten, and jailed for more than two years. Today, at twenty-eight, she leads the Indonesian National Front for Labor Struggle (FNPBI), an independent trade union. She advocates reform of Indonesia's labor laws and an end to the intrusion of the military into labor disputes. Without a voice in the political process, she says, workers will be left behind. She is helping them find their voice. The Foundation recognizes her "resolute activism on behalf of working people and their place in Indonesia's evolving democracy."

cation. I'm thinner. Tell her not to worry, I'll follow her advice to lose more weight," Arroyo said in Taglish.

Asked if he had any message for his listeners, he asked his critics to set aside politicking.

"I suppose my message is for everyone to unite. Enough of this politicking. Let's help each other. Let's shed our crab mentality and work together," Arroyo said.

Macapagal yesterday issued a statement to reiterate Ms Macapagal's belief in her husband's innocence and to say that she welcomes a congressional inquiry into the allegations.

"The President is confident that any investigation will conclude that the First Gentleman absolutely had not been involved in any bribery case," presidential spokesperson Rigo Tiglao said in the written statement.

GMA to file today

Ms Macapagal on Friday asked the Ombudsman to investigate allegations by resigned Palace secretary Veronica "Bing" Rodrigo that Arroyo had accepted a bribe to help a telecommunications company that was seeking to overturn the veto of a franchise bill.

The President said she had conducted an internal investigation for her "own satisfaction" and was prepared to disclose the results to the Ombudsman.

She implied that her probe had cleared Arroyo of any wrongdoing, but added: "It's not for me to say it's not my husband. Let somebody else say it."

She is expected to file an affidavit with the Ombudsman today revealing what she knows about the vetoed franchise bills of sister companies Philippine Communication Clearinghouse Inc. (PCCI) and APC Wireless Interface Network Inc.

'Flimsy soapbox'

Senate Minority Floor Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr on Saturday said the opposition wanted Ms Macapagal to testify or submit an affidavit in the event of a Senate inquiry.

Ms Macapagal will deal with the question of testifying if it is officially raised, according to Tiglao.

But he appealed to the opposition to stop "grandstanding" on a flimsy soapbox of baseless allegations.

She welcomes any congressional inquiry into the allegations. At this time, though, there is no such investigation ongoing, much less a request by any congressional committee for the President to testify," Tiglao said, following reports quoting Pimentel.

"Even as the Constitution provides for checks to prevent the Chief Executive from being harassed by members of a co-equal branch of government, the President will deal with such a congressional request when the time comes that such is actually made," Tiglao said.

"She is appealing to the opposition though not to make this issue a political circus," he added.

No, we have no proof

In an interview, he said the President's allies and party mates were not rushing to her defense since "no charges have been filed at all."

"They'll be making a mountain out of a molehill," Tiglao said.

In fact, Senate President Franklin Drilon did speak up yesterday to defend Ms Macapagal, saying opposition senators were just "politicking" and said there was no need to ask the President to submit to Senate questioning.

"That's all politicking. The President is not involved. Do you have any proof she's involved?" he asked the INQUIRER in a phone interview.

Drilon had earlier welcomed the plan of opposition senators to summon Mike Arroyo to shed light on the case.

"But until now they have not filed a resolution" seeking an inquiry, he said. The opposition bloc in the Senate has said it is gathering evidence to file such a resolution.

The pro-administration Senate majority is expected to finalize this week the assignment of chairmanships of congressional committees, including the powerful blue ribbon committee, which will conduct the investigation if it takes place.

John O hits Tito

The controversy took another twist yesterday, as Sen. John Osmena, a former ally of deposed President Joseph Estrada, said one of his colleagues had "some explaining to do."

In an interview in Cebu City, Osmena said Sen. Vicente Sotto III, chair of the Senate committee on public services that approved the franchise bills, should explain "if there was a public hearing."

"Sabu siya (He's part of this). He has some explaining to do," said Osmena, who added that he will ask Sotto if the National Telecommunications Commission was represented at any hearings on the bills.

He said that a Senate blue ribbon committee inquiry is "inevitable."

"This is going to be an interesting inquiry," he said.

"In fairness to Mike Arroyo, there is no indication as to how much money was paid, no evidence that rior and Local Government had raided several illegal gambling spots in Pampanga.

Lina urged Congress to add "more teeth" to anti-gambling laws.

"While new measures are in place to combat illegal gambling, our campaign must be aided by tougher laws to effectively neutralize gambling syndicates whose operations flourish due to light penalties and meagre fines," he said in a statement.

Lina said the DILG was going after gambling lords nationwide despite legal limitations.

He said illegal gambling operators were "making a mockery" of the government's campaign as they were made to pay small fines for their offense.

"With meager fines, gambling lords still find it enormously profitable to continue operations, even setting aside budgets to deal with fines and other penalties in their grand scheme to circumvent the intent of anti-gambling laws."

As part of the campaign to cleanse the ranks of the PNP, chiefs of police and station and precinct commanders will be investigated for any administrative liability once the provincial or district police office conducts separate anti-gambling operations in their areas, according to Lina.

He said provincial or city directors could be relieved if the regional police office had conducted two anti-gambling operations in their areas, or if at least two of their police chiefs had been relieved in connection with their failure to solve illegal gambling.

Even regional directors can be fired should two or more of their provincial or city directors be relieved, or once the national police headquarters conducts two or more anti-gambling operations in their areas.

payment was made. We have only (the) accusation of Bing Rodrigo against Mike, made in (response to) Mike accusing her," he said.

"Rodrigo will be called to answer questions who made the payment, when, where and how much," said Osmena in a phone interview.

No one knew

According to Osmena, the dramatis personae in the scandal will be revealed once the inquiry is under way.

"Nobody knew anything about the telecom franchise bill in the Senate," he claimed.

He added that Congress treated franchise bills as local measures similar to bills seeking to rename city

"The truth of the matter is local bills and franchises are approved in the Senate on Thursdays, when there's never a quorum," said the senator, who chaired the public services committee from 1987 to 1995.

He said the legislative franchises in question were approved during "the time of Erap (Joseph Estrada), who was pushing this bill. President Macapagal caught up with it."

The bills granting franchises for a telecom clearinghouse and nationwide telecoms system were approved in early February, shortly after Estrada's ouster. Ms Macapagal thumbed them down in April, though she recently said she does not recall vetoing them.

She implied that her probe had cleared Arroyo of any wrongdoing, but added: "It's not for me to say it's not my husband. Let somebody else say it."

She is expected to file an affidavit with the Ombudsman today revealing what she knows about the vetoed franchise bills of sister companies Philippine Communication Clearinghouse Inc. (PCCI) and APC Wireless Interface Network Inc.

Paper trail

"Once (the case is) with the blue ribbon committee, I will subpoena the Senate records on the bill and the Macapagal records. I will look for the footprints of those involved in the process," Osmena said.

He said a paper trail could possibly be traced from Presidential Liaison for Legislative Affairs Gabriel Claudio and former Executive Secretary Renato de Villa to Presidential Management Staff chief Vicki Gatchalian, a former executive with the Ayala Foundation.

According to Osmena, "it is obvious here that Ayala people in the Palace ... opposed this bill as it would have an impact on their business in Globe," the Ayala-owned telecommunications giant.

Mitsubishi board member Pacifico Marcelo owns both PCCI and APC Wireless, but there are unproven allegations that he is fronting for Estrada crony Jaime Dichever.

After she vetoed the franchise bills, the companies asked the President to reconsider her decision, although only Congress can override an executive veto. Ms Macapagal ignored the request, and the firms have since said they respect her decision to keep the vetoes in place.

Both companies have denied bribing anyone.

The President has appealed to the opposition to "suspend judgment" on the case and refrain from exploiting the controversy for partisan considerations. With a report from AFP

The foundation cited Rajendra Singh for community leadership for providing water to the people of Alwar, Rajasthan.

It said Singh "brought life back to villages, replenishing the soil and reviving his people's spirit."

DITA Indah Sari of Indonesia (left) and Oung Chantol of Cambodia: RM 2001 awardees for Emerging Leadership.

The award for peace and international understanding went to Ikuo Hirayama, a Unesco ambassador of goodwill.

will in the process."

K.W.D. Amaradeva, a child musical prodigy not so long ago, won the award for journalism, literature and creative communication arts.

According to the foundation, Amaradeva "has wedged the poetry of his native Sinhalese culture to Buddhist chants, North Indian ragas

She described the awardees "as selfless achievers who provide models for the new generation of Asians in providing food, water and livelihood to people."

Abelia said the winners also served as models "in promoting the rule of law and redefining the role of women, and in enriching this new global culture by appreciating the past and continuing with the endless task of cultural unification while maintaining national uniqueness."

This year's awardees will each receive a cash prize of $50,000, a certificate and a medallion bearing a likeness of the late Philippine President Ramon Magsaysay.

Text messages from 'dead spot'?

12:08 p.m. on July 18 by two

be members of the Agaw Cell

Phone Gang.

The robbers failed to get the victim's Trium cellular phone, but he died while fighting them off

Since Pascua's death 12 days ago, his relatives and friends have received three text messages allegedly sent from his cell phone, although its SIM (Subscriber Identity Module) card had been removed when it was cleaned

of bloodstains

Ironically, when the victim's widow Beverly was about to go to her mother's house Saturday night to

trying to communicate from the grave, she nearly lost her

in Quezon City

Beverly, 22, of 91 Valdez

St., Calmon, Malabon,

became hysterical as the robbers tried to take her

Josefina Gonzales told reporters yesterday at the

Her cries caught the attention of barangay security officials who responded and arrested three suspects—John

driver; Ranel M. Centeno, 26, a tricycle driver, and a 17-year-old boy.

Gonzales said the robbers struck at 10 p.m. near Quezon

Avenue and Elsa

"She was already distraught when I told her over the phone about the text messages," Gonzales said.

"She tried to fight off the robbers but when she remembered what happened to her husband, she let go of the phone and ran away unharmed," she added.

Gonzales said the barangay officials also recovered her daughter's

Eerie messages

The eerie text messages started to come on the second night of Pascua's wake.

The victim's sister, Eva, received a message asking if she was all right. Eva's cell phone did not register the phone number of the sender,

Gonzales said.

The following night, the victim's best friend, Chris, got a message in Filipino saying: "The enemies are already here. I am challenging you."

Gonzales said four unidentified men passed by the wake that night. Nobody knew who they were, she added.

The message registered

the number of Pascua's brother, Che-cha. But when

Chris confronted Che-cha, the latter vehemently denied sending the message and broke down in tears,

Gonzales said.

"He's a big man but be cried in front of all of us when he heard Chris' story," she added.

At 7:30 a.m. on Saturday,

Pascua's sister-in-law,

Bernadette, got a text message in Filipino: "Le, forgive me for my sins to you. Help me because the road I am going to take is dark."

Gonzales said the message

registered Pascua's Trium number. But she said that was not possible because the phone had no SIM card.

Worse, Bernadette received the message although her phone's message board was full, Gonzales said.

These messages must have been sent because

Victor did not die a peaceful death. He wants justice," she added.

Bloody phone

Pascua's Trium phone

also "bled" as his relatives were checking it, according to PO1 Ronald Zamora of the Kamuning police station,

who is investigating the case.

Zamora said Beverly had told him that her husband's call phone bled while they were checking it after they received the eerie text messages.

He said a droplet of "dark blood" oozed out of the phone's charger outlet.

There could be an explanation for the text messages

because the SIM card of

missing before the burial.

The card was placed on Pascua's chest inside the casket.

"Beverly said it just disappeared before her husband was buried," Zamora said.

"I told her not to worry about the messages. Maybe the sender will eventually run out of load," Zamora added, smiling.

"School is the only place where we feel like we are dignified beings," said Marcos, who was also convicted of homicide.

Both Marcos and Florante are candidates for executive clemency.

Elementary and HS

There are 100 inmates enrolled in the elementary program, accredited as an extension of the Itas Elementary School, while 230 study in the annex of the Muntinlupa National High School.

Maximum-security inmates are barred from the basic education and college courses due to the security risks, but they can avail themselves of nonformal and vocational classes, prison officials said.

Supt. Venjo Tesoro, one of the founders of the penitentiary's education program, said justice officials initially thumbed down the idea, fearing that it would spoil the criminals the government was trying to punish.

Back then, only the prisoners coming from more affluent families, like ex-cons Bongbong Crisologo, Nilo Tayag and Butch Belgica, could afford to study while serving time. They availed themselves of distance education programs from expensive universities in Manila, Tesoro said.

But the advent of modern penology, which advocates rehabilitation instead of punishment, changed the system.

And "education is the bedrock of rehabilitation," Tesoro said. "We cannot completely reform a person without educating him so he can live decently in free society."

Stigma

He says the NBP chose to offer a course in entrepreneurship because self-employment is the most viable option for ex-convicts who often bear the stigma of being former criminals long after they had paid for their crimes.

"Besides, with the present economic situation where even graduates of good schools can't get a job, the ex-convicts don't stand a chance," said Tesoro, NBP information officer. "Our goal is to remove them from the fold of crime when they get out of here."

The college diplomas are accredited by the UPHR, and bear no reference to the fact that the degree was earned in prison, a fact which should only be stated when absolutely necessary to give the prisoners the dignity they deserve as successful students, according to officials.

Resurrecion Morales, one of the first officials who volunteered for the education program, said the inmates are so disciplined inside the classroom that it is hard to believe they are convicted robbers, rapists and killers.

They don't fight or threaten instructors, and instead hold their teachers in the highest regard, she said.

"We are the ones who are scared of the teachers. They could fail us, and then where would we be?" Marcos said.

Now chief of the education division of the NBP, Morales says nearly all of the 200 college graduates from the prison have been released.

Some of them visit the NBP, proudly boasting of the bakery or the fish ball stand that they established after college and are using to feed their families today.

Hackett shatters Perkins' record

FIKUOKA, Japan—Australia's Grant Hackett set a world record to win the 1,500-meter freestyle in 14 minutes, 34.56 seconds yesterday, slicing 7.10 seconds off the previous mark as he defended the world championship title he won in 1998. The 21-year-old Australian emerged from the shadows of two competitors when he beat the mark Kieren Perkins set in 1994 and finally took gold at the 9th world championships after taking two silvers behind Ian Thorpe.

Aces, Hotdogs win

GAMES WEDNESDAY (PhilSports)
5:15 p.m.—Purefoods vs Red Bull
7:30 p.m.—Alaska vs San Miguel

By JUNE NAVARRO

ALASKA drew first blood with a thrilling 75-66 rout over San Miguel Beer last night at the start of their PBA Commissioner's Cup best-of-five semifinal showdown at the Araneta Coliseum.

The Beermen crumbled in the homestretch, allowing the Aces to easily escape with the victory.

In the second game, the Purefoods Hotdogs rolled past the Red Bull Thunder, 91-75, to take the opener of their semis series.

Sean Chambers came up with short jumpers together with Don Allado and Rodney Santos as the Aces soared to a 71-55 advantage in the last six minutes.

Everything went the Aces way until Olsen Racela took matters into his own hands to revive the Beermen's bid.

Racela's leadership proved to be a big gift but the Aces countered as Allado's jumper and Kenneth Durendes' partially blocked layup thwarted the Beermen for good in the final minute.

"We played good defense and executed very well. But more importantly, we didn't allow Ildefonso (Denny) to do his thing," said Alaska coach Tim Cone.

The Aces' suffocating defense on Ildefonso down low coupled by Seigle's aemic show from beyond the arc justified the Beermen's defeat.

De La Salle scrapes past UP; Warriors rip Tigers

By DENNIS EROA

DEFENDING titlist De La Salle went through the wringer before escaping with an 85-82 win over hard-fighting UP yesterday in the UAAP men's basketball championship at the Loyola Gym.

The Green Archers engaged the Maroons in a virtual shootout and battle of nerves with the final outcome being decided only to the dying seconds.

The victory gave the Archers a piece of the lead with a 3-1 slate, same records of Ateneo, UE and FEU. UP dropped to 1-3 in the company of UST.

Backed by Willy Wilson's offensive rebounding, the Archers kept the Maroons at bay even as swingman Ren Rea Ritalo (27 points, four triples) and UP's Michael Bravo (29 points, 18 in the fourth quarter) resembled angry pistolaros as they traded shots at will.

Bravo's all-around show provided the spark until the 6-foot-1 hotshot made a hurried layup in the final 24 seconds and La Salle nursing a slim 83-82 lead.

Ritalo had the last laugh as he earned two free throws and then the green-and-white galaxy whooped it up when Mark Cardona partially deflected Patrick Madarang's desperation heave from the three-point area.

"We're being tested. We're playing with flashes of brilliance," said coach Franz Pumares, who is looking for his fourth straight crown.

La Salle took a 41-21 halftime lead and spent the next 20 minutes trying to ward off UP's repeated rallies.

In the other seniors' game, UE used the zone defense to whipping UST, 67-57, for its third straight win after an opening-day setback to NU.

The Red Warriors, whose last title came in 1985, hardly missed the services of head coach Boyse Zamar who was coaching the Soesuren Marlins in an out-of-town MBA game.

Ecija clobbers Socsargen

GAMES WEDNESDAY:
3:00 p.m.—Cebuana Lhuillier vs Davao (Rizal Memorial College gym, Davao)
5:30 p.m.—FedEx Laguna vs LBC Batangas (La Salle Upa)

LIPA—Jonathan de Guzman took the limelight as Nueva Ecija routed the Bong Alvarez-less Socsargen, 97-54, yesterday in the MBA First Phase at the Sentrum De La Salle here.

De Guzman fired a new career-high of 25 points, highlighted by four triples, as the Patriots improved to 3-9.

LBC Batangas and Andok's San Juan are still playing as of press time.

De Guzman, who pumped in 32 points in the first half where Nueva Ecija made its breakaway, also grabbed seven rebounds, dished out three assists and had three steals.

Socsargen, which surely missed the leadership and scoring prowess of the injured Alvarez (foot injury), absorbed its 11th loss in 13 games.

With de Guzman stringing up 14 straight points on a 6-of-6 shooting and the Marlins obviously lacking a leader, the Patriots tore the game apart with a 20-6 opening salvo.

The game was practically over by the second quarter as the Patriots, after successfully breaking the pressing defense thrown at them by the Marlins, widened the gap to 27 at 53-26.

ROTC should train, not sell—Army chief

BY PHILIP C. TUBEZA

THE RESERVE Officer Training Corps (ROTC) is not a sari-sari store and it should not engage in "business concerns," according to the Army chief, Lt. Gen. Jaime de los Santos.

Yesterday, De los Santos ordered Army commandants to stop making money out of the ROTC program in schools all over the country.

"We should focus on the training of our cadets," he said. "I do not like the ROTC being involved in non-ROTC activities. It should not be involved in business concerns like selling T-shirts, snacks and soft drinks."

He made these statements when he visited the UP Vanguard, the ROTC unit in the University of the Philippines in Diliman, Quezon City.

He said his order is part of an ongoing effort to reform the ROTC while Congress is deciding whether the program should be abolished or not.

"As long as there is no law repealing the ROTC, we still have a roundabout to implement it," De los Santos said.

Calls for the program's abolition mounted after University of Santo Tomas engineering student Mark Wilson Chua was brutally murdered last March for exposing alleged anomalies in his school's ROTC program.

De los Santos said the Armed Forces top brass is now very selective about the officers it assigns to head the different ROTC units. But he said it is having a hard time assigning officers because of the increasing number of cadets and the country's mounting insurgency problem, which keeps the officers' corps of the Armed Forces busy.

He said that in the provinces, quality officers active in the battlefield have also been required to teach ROTC cadets during weekends.

In Metro Manila, some ROTC units will be using the latest technology to make the program more acceptable to cadets.

Starting next week, San Sebastian College cadets would be able to know through text messaging the schedule, type of uniform, and subject to be taught during training, said Capt. Harold Anthony Pascua.

In a special arrangement with Globe, cadets simply have to write "SSCR_ROTC" and send the message to 2333 to get information about their next training day, Pascua added.

W. Iam Chua, the father of the murdered UST student, said the Armed Forces needs to weed out more corrupt and abusive officers from its ranks.

He said he is not in favor of abolishing the ROTC but wants it reformed.

"Mark loved the institution," said Chua of his slain son. "He wanted to reform it."

In Baguio City, threats of massive walkouts and protests led by members of militant student groups have forced ROTC officials in the city to enforce an alert status in the ROTC's weekend training sessions since last week.

Lt. Col. Daniel Mamuril, ROTC commanding officer for Baguio and Benguet, said they declared a "red alert status" following receipt of intelligence reports that protests would be held by student groups pushing for the abolition of the ROTC.

ROTC military police cadets and other ROTC cadets guarded the gates leading to the training grounds to bar protesters from disrupting the training.

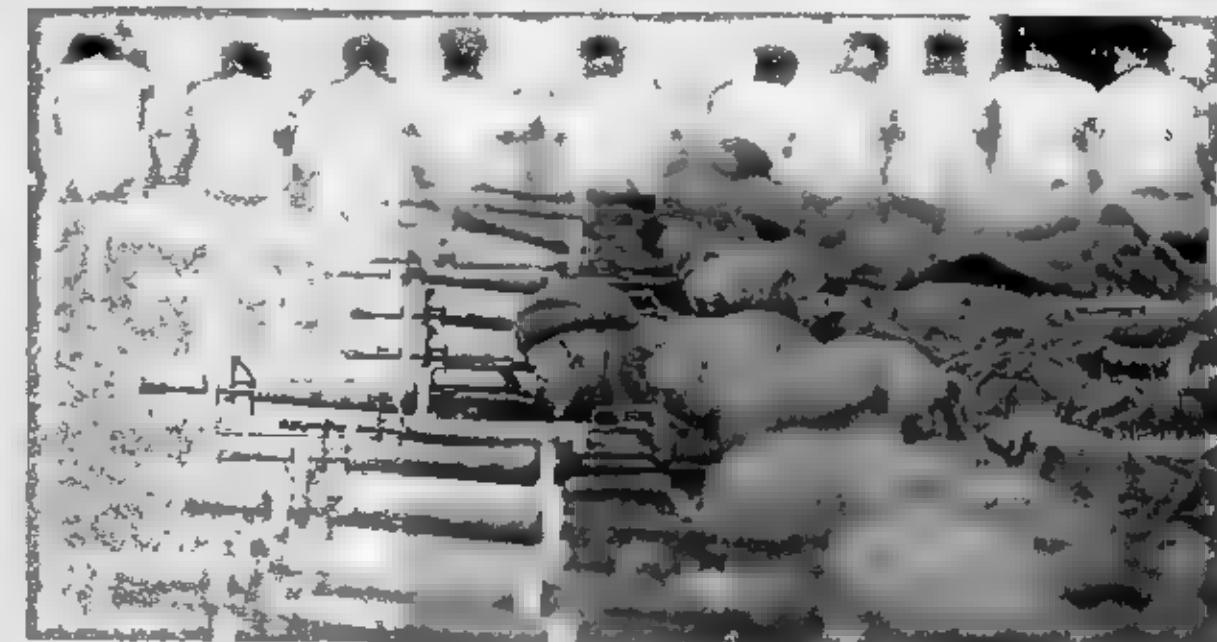

Yesterday, about 200 cadets from the University of Baguio walked out of their training to dramatize their support for the call to abolish ROTC.

The UB ROTC cadets marched along Magsaysay Road and Bonifacio Road and staged a noise barrage.

Local chapters of student groups League of Filipino Students (LFS), Anakbayan and the National Union of Students of the Philippines (NUSP) led the abolition campaign.

The Abolish! (Network for the Abolition of ROTC) and the Union of Former Cadets (UFC) were also launched in the city to intensify the anti-ROTC campaign.

"The sentiments of the students against the ROTC continue to snowball," said Wilfredo Dizon, chair of Anakbayan UP Baguio and UFC convenor. "The bravery shown by UP cadets (in) the past two training days

UNDER FIRE for alleged corruption in the system, the ROTC training program continues to train college students, including these cadets in the University of the Philippines in Diliman, Quezon City inspired their counterparts in UB to do the same last Sunday."

Louie Awingan, spokesperson of the Progressive Ignorants for Social Action (Piga) and convenor of Abolish! in UB, said: "We are taking the call to the streets. We cannot anymore take the scorching heat of the sun and the senseless and cruel treatment we get from our officers. We cannot anymore afford to sacrifice our lives and limbs for this corrupt and worthless institution. Lalasag kame! (We will fall out!)"

Plans for a bigger walkout fizzled out after UPCB cadets, who would have led the citywide walkout, were ordered to report for classroom lectures.

Voltaire Tupaz, NUSP Baguio-Benguet chair, said the cadets were "locked" in classrooms to prevent them from joining the walkout.

"They know we were coming and they were afraid they would not be able to (prevent) their cadets from (leaving)."

Still, Tupaz said they would not give up and would continue their protests against the ROTC.

In Calamba, Laguna, a Catholic Church leader has expressed support for student groups and individuals who are fighting for the abolition of ROTC.

Fr. Philip Atienza, San Pablo Diocesan Social Action director, told the Inquirer that the ROTC has become an instrument of abuse and corruption.

He cited his experience during his college days in Manila where ROTC officers would collect P15 from each cadet as part of attendance requirements. "How can these people (ROTC officers) assure students of better discipline and training when they themselves are leaders of abuse and corruption?" Atienza said. "We can't give what we don't have."

He admitted that "ROTC in itself is good. But due to the number of the reported cases of anomaly and crime, the good intention is defeated."

"I personally support any move to abolish it (ROTC) with the recommendation for a thorough investigation of the anomalies," he said. With reports from Jovelyn Reyes, PDI Northern Luzon Bureau; Romulo O. Poate, PDI Southern Luzon Bureau

2 more in rob-slay fall

TWO more suspects in the robbery-slaying of an Indian last May were arrested while allegedly trying to pull off another robbery in Pasig City on Saturday night.

They were identified as Jay Gemilat, 29, of Botanie 1, Barangay Pinagbahanan, Pasig City, and Manuel Mallo, 28, of West Bank, Floodway, Cainta, Rizal. Both were believed to be members of the notorious robbery group known as Waray-Waray Gang.

Insp. Rodante Arciga, chief of the Pasig police follow-up division, said policemen confiscated from the suspects a .357 nickel-plated magnum revolver with six live bullets, a fan knife and a Honda motorcycle (TL-44-16), which is believed to have been stolen.

The two suspects were caught around 8 p.m. at the corner of M. H. del Pilar and M. Suarez streets in Palauig.

The two were reportedly trying to hold up tricycle driver Victor Reyes, 30.

Five days ago, police also arrested suspected robbers Arnold Cayas, 32 and Dante Oresa, 24, who allegedly belong to the same group as Gemilat and Mallo.

17th Week in Ordinary Time

Ex 32:15-24, 30-34
Mt 13:31-35

1st Reading:

Gospel.

Jesus put another parable before them, "The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed, that a man took and sowed in his field.

It is smaller than all other seeds, but once it has fully grown, it is bigger than any garden plant, like a tree, the birds come and rest in its branches."

He told them another parable, "The kingdom of heaven is like the yeast which a woman took and buried in three measures of flour until the whole mass of dough began to rise."

Jesus taught all this to the crowds by means of parables; he did not say anything to them without using a parable. So what the Prophet had said was right. I will speak in parables. I will proclaim things kept secret since the beginning of the world.

Commentary

The early Christians were confronted with the very practical problem of how to bring Christians from Jewish and Gentile origins together as members of one church. For the Jews, Gentiles were unclean and did not belong to the people of God. Against this background Jesus tells parables about a mustard seed that does not ordinarily grow in the garden, and about yeast that is normally considered to be impure. Jesus explains now that when the mustard seed is sown in the good garden and when the unclean yeast is mixed with the clean flour, the kingdom of God grows to unknown proportions.

Heavenly Father, in your wisdom you brought different kinds of people together in the Church. Teach us how to work together to bring about your kingdom.

Kidnapping suspect nabbed

POLICE arrested a woman for allegedly kidnapping a 2-year-old boy in Malabon.

Veronica Labore, 35, of San Rafael Village, Tondo, Manila, was arrested Saturday after she allegedly abducted Cee Jay Domingo about 4 p.m. that day near his house on Dr Lascano Street in Tugatog, Malabon, said PO3 Ferdinand Espiritu.

Witnesses called village watchmen, who arrested Labore.

Labore refused to talk and pretended to be mentally ill, apparently to make police release her, Espiritu said.

Police said the woman did not kidnap the boy for ransom since his family could not have raised a big amount of money. They believe Labore intended to sell the boy.

Labore was charged with kidnapping because she was able to drag the boy for about 10 meters.

10 lawmen face contempt raps for failing to arrest 9 cops

BY JEROME ANING

A DEPARTMENT of Justice prosecutor has identified 10 officials and men of the National Bureau of Investigation, the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group and the Western Police District who could be cited for contempt for failing to arrest nine WPD policemen for the 2000 killing of two suspected terrorists.

State Prosecutor Peter Ong said the officials he wanted cited for contempt are Teresita Lampa, head of the NBI warrant division, CIDG-Manila head Supt. Bayani dela Rosa and his predecessor Chief Insp. Edgardo Divina, and WPD warrant section chief Senior Insp. Virgilio Dacara.

Judge Rodolfo Ponferrada ordered the DOJ to identify those who failed to arrest the policemen-suspects, whose whereabouts remain unknown up to this day.

Ong filed the motion to cite the lawmen for contempt on July 4.

Ponferrada later ordered him to specify those he wants cited for contempt.

NBI investigation later showed that the two men who were killed were applicants for overseas jobs. The lawmen insisted the two were terrorists who tried to fight back to evade arrest.

The DOJ prosecutor cited the rules of court in seeking contempt charges against the chiefs of the warrant sections of the CIDG, the WPD and the NBI for not furnishing the court a report on how they served the arrest warrants.

"More than four months had lapsed, but the heads of the aforesaid offices failed to comply with the mandate of the above rule, thereby frustrating the ends of justice," said Ong in his petition.

Aside from Supt. Wilson Tibor, charged with the killing of the two men were Supt. Remigio Estacio, Supt. Edgardo Abaga, Supt. Julian Siriban, Supt. Eduardo Ramos, PO3 Randy Dimayuga, PO2 Ronald Hernandez, PO2 Philip Malindog, and PO1 Ignacio Garlan.

The WPD-DPIU was reportedly furnished copies of the warrants issued by Judge Ponferrada five months ago but, like the NBI and CIDG, it failed to serve them.

He cited, among other things, the way jail wardens handle media whenever untoward incidents occur.

He said jail wardens should take the initiative of calling media and help in getting the facts right.

He said jail wardens should get used to dealing with media. Under the newly created community relations service, representatives from media, people's and non-government organizations will be given the authority to monitor conditions in BJMP jails and report these to the BJMP leadership.

He also cited an agreement to effect savings in power consumption by 10 percent every quarter. He said this was discussed with the 17 assistant regional directors of the bureau in a recent consultative meeting at the BJMP central office.

He said the reduction in power consumption would impact on the operating expenses of jails. Any savings could be used in the improvement of jail facilities and services, he said.

He called the second meeting to remind them of the standing policies in dealing with inmates and to announce new ones that would streamline jail operation.

Ali told the jail wardens to be more transparent in running their jails so they could earn the full support and cooperation of the community.

A movie, a book and a supermarket visit with Josh

"JURASSIC Park III" is really worth watching. I caught it Thursday night in Greenbelt, and I screamed my head off for most of the film.

It's a thrill and should really be viewed in the theater. They didn't scrimp on the special effects and the dinosaurs are extremely life-like and seen all throughout the film, unlike in the first "Jurassic Park" and in "The Lost World" where their appearance was bum!

I truly felt I got more than my money's worth. Watch it with a friend who won't mind being grabbed, tugged, pinched and shoved by you. ***

I HAVE just finished the book "The Blue Nowhere" by Jeffery (up, that's how he spells his name) Deaver. It's an excellent, well-researched, yet non-textbook like cyber-thriller.

We do so much work on our laptops or PCs, we go on-line for information, e-mailing, Internet shopping, on-line banking, and infinitely more. This book gave me an Insight into how little I really know about the unique powers of the computer and how all my personal information can be dissected and used for purposes that can abuse or harm me. Thank goodness that for most computer hackers there's an unwritten code of conduct that spares us "civilians" from harm (economic sabotage, altering of our medical files and the like). It's an unbelievably hard to put down book. ***

Kris Aquino

ONE of my favorite childhood activities with my mom when I was a child was doing our family's supermarket shopping together. During the late '70s and early 1980s, it was either UniMart in Greenhills or Tropical Hut on Quezon Avenue.

Josh and I are continuing the tradition, although we only get to do it every six weeks or so.

We traveled all the way to Katipunan Avenue near Ateneo to give Rustan's Fresh a try. About two months ago, our newspaper had a leaflet announcing the opening of the new branch.

I was impressed by the array of fresh fruits and vegetables on display. These were arranged in baskets so you could touch the produce and bag your choices personally. They also had a lot of meat, fish and poultry, in convenient one-meal-for-one-family-size styrofoam and cling-wrap packaging.

The set-up reminded me of a Safeway Supermarket, just like in California. The aisles were wide, the shopping carts were either spacious for bulk shoppers like me, shaped like a car for those with toddlers (poor Josh was just too big to fit into one), or smaller ones for daily shoppers.

Commercials always work with Josh and me. My son loves the scent of the new variants of Gee Your Hair Smells Terrific. I love the way the new Rejoice Complete shampoo cleans and conditions his hair, and the shampoo also smells very clean.

I'm so glad that Dove is now distributed locally by Unilever. I'm partial to the unscented variant, alternating that with Cetaphil for my facial cleansing. Both really keep my face smooth, clean, yet never dry.

Josh's skin is softest when we use Johnson's PH 5.5 2-in-1 body wash with moisturizers and the matching PH 5.5 body lotion.

Unlike other kids who have to be forced to take a shower, Josh has to be coaxed to get out of the shower. I guess he inherited his vanity from me, because his ritual is never complete until we put lotion on him after each shower. Sometimes that's up to four times in the course of the day. My son asked for Mio when we were in the aisle where all the milk products were. He used to gulp down a lot of my coffee until I finally convinced him that warm milk with Mio was even yummier than my coffee.

He's also in love with Royal Tru Orange over and above all other soft drinks, hence we buy two cases. My mom was never strict with me regarding softdrink consumption, as long as it was with meals and not taken first thing in the morning. So that's also our rule in the house.

Josh loves Del Monte's canned pineapple orange and four seasons juice drinks. He also enjoys Mr. Juicy Orange Juice.

I'm sure the cashier and the baggers felt our household must drink a lot since we had so many different softdrinks (Diet Coke, Diet Sprite and Mountain Dew for me), juices, and milks (Anchor in the individual tetra pack for Josh, Magnolia Low Fat for me).

According to our cook Mel, Josh often asks for mami, noodles with a hard-boiled egg for breakfast or merienda. So a dozen packs of the chicken and the beef variants went into our cart. I just don't recall which noodle brand we bought, but my cook said we should try both Lucky Me and Maggi, since she wasn't sure which he preferred.

Josh is also obsessed with cheese, so we buy all kinds, from quick melt to cheddar to cheesefood to grated parmesan cheese.

When we were in the cookie section, I told Josh he could choose whatever he wanted, but it was just Chips Ahoy for him and nothing else. I asked Yaya Anna why Josh didn't get any Oreos, and she said that Josh really prefers Chips Ahoy. I was the one who was partial to Oreos (Shucks, nabigso ako).

I'm sure that like me, all moms out there really do their supermarket shopping in the hope of pleasing their kids. For us busy moms, it's a way of showing we care enough to do it personally.

As long as our budget can handle it, whatever will make them happy really does go into the cart. Their choices really matter most to us, and what they want is on top of our priority list.

Lucky for me, Josh has always had a very healthy appetite, and it's a joy to buy him food since he really appreciates and enjoys eating

Ang Lee ("The Ice Storm," "Sense and Sensibility" & "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon") once again takes audiences on a journey to a different time and place, and into the characters' internal conflicts. A cast of rising young stars portrays young Americans, striving to define themselves and the country they had always called home, amidst national turmoil. The screenplay for Rise with the Devil is adapted by Lee's longtime collaborator, James Schamus, from Daniel Woodrell's novel Woe to Live On.

BY GIL C. CABACUNGAN JR.

GLOBE Telecom Inc. is investing P39.82 billion for an expansion program designed to boost capacity to more than 7 million by December 2003 and meet the rapid growth of mobile phone subscribers and banking for better services.

Globe Telecom, a joint venture between the Ayala group and Singapore Telecom International Pte. Ltd., will spend P25.82 billion of its cash and borrow P14 billion to install nearly 1,000 new cell sites, 37 base stations, and 17 mobile switching centers over the next two and half years. Globe's project would allow the firm to add 3,922 million new subscribers to its network.

Globe Telecom said the project, dubbed the Phase 8 Expansion, would lessen the firm's dropped call rates, lower signal blocking and boost its call-up success rate aimed at maintaining reliable and efficient service even during peak hours.

The company is confident that demand for mobile communication would continue to rise sharply in the near- to medium-term since penetration rate remained low at 8.3 percent for wireless and 4.1 percent for fixed lines.

The expansion project was granted pioneer status by the Board of Investment because it more than exceeded the P1-billion minimum investment for this type of undertaking.

However, Globe would be eligible for a three-year income tax holiday instead of the standard six-year term for pioneer investments because the BOI deemed it as an expansion of previously registered projects.

Previously, the BOI granted similar perks to Globe Telecom rival Smart Communications Inc., which has budgeted P17 billion for its project to increase the capacity of its digital cellular network.

Smart is expanding its GSM (global system for mobile communication) network capacity for both voice calls and short messaging system or text messages to meet the near doubling of its subscriber base to 4 million at the end of this year from 2.3 million last year.

This is the third project registered by Globe Telecom with the BOI with the first two projects made in 1994 for the installation of 700,000 lines and international digital gateway facility in Metro Manila, and the establishment of a nationwide digital cellular mobile telephone system to be based in Manila and Cebu.

Globe Telecom is currently negotiating with mobile phone providers Nokia Communication of Finland and Ericsson Radio System of Sweden for the supply of GSM equipment.

Telecommunications Inc. (P17.1 billion), Globe Telecom Inc.'s P39.7 project, which was approved last week is expected to further boost the BOI's investment registration performance.

BOI managing head Gregory Domingo revealed that several big ticket items—with project costs ranging from P2 billion to P8 billion—were still in the pipeline and were still undergoing review.

Domingo said the surge in investment flows into the country was also reflected in the Philippine Economic Zone Authority's performance. Investments in Peza industrial estates rose 19 percent to P19.8 billion in the first half of this year from P16.5 billion in 2000.

Domingo's immediate predecessor, Energy Secretary Vincent Perez, had targeted a modest 15-percent growth in investments to P50 billion on this year as the economy goes into a consolidation phase with the abrupt change in administration.

Perez said the BOI had discounted this year as a "transition period" and was looking toward a more explosive growth in the next three years. Investors have taken a wait-and-see mode this year due to the sluggish economic growth and lingering skepticism over the new administration.

Retirees back SSS privatization

AT a roast pork loin dinner the other night, the officers of the Philippine Association of Retired Persons (PARP)—the nationwide organization of SSS and GSIS retirees—made one thing absolutely clear to the officers of the Alert and Concerned Employees for a Better SSS (Access), the SSS employees union: PARP was backing all the way the privatization of certain SSS functions as spelled out by SSS president Nafagtas.

For weeks now, Access has been staging demonstrations in front of the SSS main office in Quezon City during lunch break. Posters plastered on the SSS building scream no to privatization and demand Nafagtas' resignation.

Access is scared that privatization will result in loss of jobs. PARP explained that, in privatizing investments, if outside fund managers were to handle only new investible funds (about P15 billion is generated every year), there would be no job loss. Also, since the computers are already running at full capacity, if only the excess load will be farmed out to private servers (this is called out sourcing, quite popular in the private sector), there will be no job loss.

During the Estrada administration, SSS bought condominium units and other types of real estate. (Eraps was not only a stock broker; he was also a real estate broker.) Some of these properties may have to be sold to ease cash flow. ID card production may be privatized if it could be done more cheaply by an outside contractor. There will be some job loss, but it can be absorbed by other departments. Certainly, there will be no mass layoffs. In fact, Nafagtas says in writing that no one will lose his job.

After PARP's explanation, Access agreed that privatization is nothing to be really scared of.

Nafagtas had explained to PARP that the loss in crony investments during the past administration, estimated to reach as much as P15 billion, would have to be recovered somehow. One way is to cut expenses by privatizing certain functions.

Talking of expenses, in 1998, a year after the new law was enacted, SSS approved across-the-board salary increases amounting to—hold your breath—close to P1 billion. For the 4,000 employees, this meant an average increase of almost P250,000 per head. When one considers that the retiree's average pension is P2,640 monthly, and more than half of the 800,000 retirees grovel at the minimum of P2,000 monthly, the salary increases are downright sinful.

Access has shown little concern beyond its own self-interest. When the Equitable Bank PCI merger scandal broke in 1999 (members are losing almost P4.5 billion so far on this deal), Access kept mum. Other investment scandals came to light. Access said nothing. When PARP raised its voice against these scandals, there was not one word of sympathy from Access.

Why should Access care? It's not their money.

SSS employees are government employees. They are GSIS, not SSS, members. Except for some who have opted for voluntary membership (at their huge salaries, they can well afford it) SSS employees do not contribute into SSS.

Finally, PARP was concerned that communist front organizations like Courage, KMU and Sanlakas are supporting Access. PARP made it clear that if Access continues naively flirting with these groups, PARP will never support Access. Access promised to be careful with the company it keeps. On this high note, the meeting ended. A nice time was had by all.

RP urged to step up campaign against piracy

CITING weak enforcement of laws protecting intellectual property rights, an officer of the United States Embassy in Manila is urging government to step up its campaign against piracy of optical discs and cable TV signals.

Speaking at a recent forum on piracy issues, US economic officer David Krzywda said existing Philippine laws against piracy were adequate. "But without enforcement, laws are useless," he stressed.

The embassy official made the observation amid the proliferation and public sale of pirated software, VCDs and other optical media discs, including the unabated piracy of cable TV signals by rogue cable operators throughout the country.

Due to the growing incidence of piracy, Krzywda said the Philippines was recently included in the US Special 301 Priority Watch List—a roster of countries that failed to provide adequate protection to intellectual property rights (IPR). "If the situation deteriorates, the Philippines could face investigation by the Office of the US Trade Representative and possible retaliatory moves or trade sanctions," he said.

Despite the bleak scenario, he expressed confidence that President Macapagal-Arroyo would take every step to get the Philippines out of the Special 301 Watch List. This view was shared by director general Emma Francisco of the Intellectual Property Office (IPO) who stressed that IPR and piracy issues were being given the highest priority by the President.

Even the National Telecommunications Commission (NTC) has made assurances that the agency is taking every effort to curb piracy, especially in the cable TV industry. NTC Deputy Commissioners Kathleen Heceta and Arni Jane Borge said their agency recognizes its role to protect the rights of program providers. "To do this, however, we at the NTC need to have the necessary information and materials that will enable us to implement the law effectively. Needless to say, we need to give more teeth to the law," Borge stressed.

Peso madness solution

ON THE
John Mangun

REGARDLESS of your opinion of the speech, it was probably a good thing that the Sona was given last Monday. At least it encouraged both government and bankers to keep the peso from falling any more. As of this writing, you can comfortably buy one US dollar for 53+ pesos. Isn't life wonderful!

I hesitate to describe the current situation as the same as looking at a chicken running around with its head cut off. However, I do see some striking similarities. On one hand, the administration says that it is committed to the free market and the price forces thereof. At the same time the Bangko Sentral warns that it is going to "go after" dollar hoarders. If I remember correctly, the "free market" allows me to board what ever I want.

For weeks, we have been told that the price of the peso is the result of many factors, none of which includes price speculation. (That is their word. Mine is manipulation). Nonetheless, the BSP has identified at least a dozen banks whose currency trading practices are suspect. And as of last Monday, for the first time, Finance Secretary Camacho said the government is now convinced that some banks have been speculating against the peso, dragging it to a new six-month low. I have been telling you that since the end of June.

Allow me to warn you of something. Regardless of the government's newfound knowledge and wisdom about currency trading, the economic danger we face is far from over.

I have received numerous letters telling me how wrong I am about the peso being artificially weak. I am told that we have no business comparing ourselves currency-wise to Thailand, as that economy is booming and therefore the baht at 45 is justified. A report issued last Thursday shows that the Thai economy will grow at 2.3 percent this year, miraculously on par with the Philippines. The euphoria in Indonesia will evaporate quickly, causing a further slide of the rupiah. These two "regional" problems will give justification to the bank "speculators" to further weaken our currency. I hope that I am wrong but either way, "they" win and you lose.

And speaking of being wrong, let us assume for a moment that I am simply paranoid about the banks and all that we have been told about "free market forces" is accurate. Let us assume that our god-forsaken economy does warrant a 60 to the dollar currency. That does not discount the fact that the government has no policy or program in place to mitigate the effects of a weakening currency. Of course, my solution requires government recognizing the needs of business and business working closely with the government. Those two elements make success almost impossible but let's try it anyway.

Dollar buyers have different reasons and different requirements. Take the Filipino company that imports raw materials and exports the finished goods. Armed with a letter of credit for raw material purchases and a contract to sell the finished goods abroad, this company goes to the BSP. The BSP agrees to sell dollars at a rate of 45 to the dollar. The company agrees to sell back to the BSP the dollars it receives from its exports at a rate of 44.75. The company gets "cheap" dollars. It has no currency risk and likewise makes no additional profit from the currency transaction. The BSP has its dollars back in the vault a few months later with a very slight profit to cover transaction expenses. The company can concentrate on making its profit from its core business with no concern as to currency fluctuations. The BSP uses its dollars to help a Filipino business stay in business without risk to the international reserves.

Another local firm imports products not available locally and of an essential nature that is repackaged for sale to the domestic market only. This might include powdered milk, for example. Here the problem is more complicated but solvable. Right now, there are millions of dollars sitting in deposits at very low interest rates with the local banks. The BSP offers to set up interest bearing accounts at a rate much higher than normal dollar deposits but with the interest payable in pesos. The interest payment is made to the depositor quarterly and is based on the then current peso-dollar conversion rate. Interest would be tax free.

The principal deposit is locked up for a period of five years and if liquidated earlier must be converted to pesos based on the peso-dollar rate at time of placement. The dollars that the BSP receives in deposits is then loaned to the importer at an interest rate higher than being given to the initial deposit again payable in pesos. The loan is then repaid in dollars or in pesos, the rate based on conversion factor at the time the loan is made. The BSP takes a slight risk that depreciation would cost them but only on the interest payment and not on the principal. The depositor would, at the worst, get dollars back with the higher tax-free interest offsetting any currency losses. The borrower takes no currency risk but pays slightly higher interest rate on his loan to offset this lack of currency risk. Further, he is not required to source dollars using cash in hand. By this, there would be less pressure on the price of the peso, as legitimate demand would not have "to go into the market" to obtain dollars. This same system could be used for importers of capital equipment. Risks notwithstanding, in the meantime Filipino business continues while waiting for general economic conditions to improve.

Other dollar "users" could continue to source at the jewelry store/money changer located near Recto. The problem is that the administration and the BSP in particular, due to a lack of policy and program, are forcing legitimate dollar buyers to behave like the speculators that are causing our economy and country so much damage.

Boni firms given 10 days to start work on exchange

BY ELENA R. TORRIJOS

THE PHILIPPINE Stock Exchange, through its legal counsel, has demanded that Fort Bonifacio Development Corp. and Capital Consortium Inc. immediately begin construction of the exchange's premises for a unified trading floor in accordance with a 1999 relocation agreement.

In a letter last week to FBDC chair Manoel Pangilinan and CCI president Ricardo Pascua, Bernardo Lopez of Tan Acut & Lopez law firm, said that, if within 10 days of receipt of the letter the property developers have not yet begun construction based on the terms earlier agreed upon, the exchange would file appropriate court action.

The PSE also demanded that, within the same period, FBDC and CCI turnover over deeds of donation over the properties promised for the bourse in Bonifacio Global City.

"Two months have passed since you are supposed to commence construction of the PSE premises and there is no certainty or any indication that you will comply with your obligations. Based on expert evaluation, if you do not forthwith start construction of the PSE premises, it is physically impossible for you to complete construction thereof to allow our client sufficient time to fit out the premises to permit trading to commence in December 2004," Lopez noted.

Under the 1999 relocation agreement signed by FBDC and CCI, the PSE was to relocate its unified trading floor to Bonifacio Global City to spur development of the area and promote it as the country's new financial capital.

In return, FBDC and CCI were to donate a 40,000-square meter lot at Capital Place within the city and provide P250 million for the construction of a PSE building by 2001.

Last month, FBDC and CCI proposed amendments to the agreement, which the PSE rejected. FBDC and CCI had proposed the PSE accept another lot outside Capital Place. The two companies also indicated they would no longer construct the building for the PSE.

The PSE, however, refused to make any amendment to the relocation agreement.

"To open (the agreement) to amendments at this time, especially along the lines you have suggested, would be going back to the drawing board," the PSE said.

The PSE also argued that the deeds of donation were long overdue. They cited their deals with Ayala Land and the Ortigas Center, where the two bourses are currently located, in which they received their deeds of donation within a week of the signing of agreements.

Treasury to issue $200M worth of one-year T-bills

BY CLARISSA S. BATINO

THE BUREAU of Treasury has lined up another low-yield, dollar-denominated borrowing for the government worth $200 million involving the issuance of one-year treasury bills to be arranged by Citibank N.A. next month.

The fresh borrowing will bring to more than $1.2 billion the foreign borrowing the government has signed so far. This excludes the P30-billion dollar-linked bonds to be issued soon.

Aside from financing a projected P145-billion budget deficit, the government recently resorted to dollar-denominated and dollar-linked borrowings to help ease the pressure on the peso, which had weakened to $53.42 to $1 last Friday.

The government has so far raised $200 million from a private placement with Credit Suisse First Boston plus a similar $100 million borrowing from JP Morgan Chase.

A $500- to $800-million bond deal to be handled by Credit Suisse First Boston was scheduled in the next two months while a $120-million dollar swap with HSBC would be released this week.

National Treasurer Sergio Edaza said the government had already tapped Citibank to handle the issuance of $100 million to $200 million worth of dollar-denominated one-year treasury bills.

The dollar-denominated treasury bills will offer a yield of 2 to 2.3 percentage points over the six-month London interbank offered rate. Last Friday, the six-month Libor stood at 3.72 percent.

"We want to build up our cash position and the reason why it was dollar-denominated was to prevent our domestic interest rates from increasing," the national treasurer said.

Edaza said the initial size of the Citibank-arranged borrowing would be $100 million but he said the government could issue as much as $200 million if investors would buy the issue.

He said the pricing of 2 to 2.3 percentage points over Libor was at par with the yield of sovereign bonds of the same tenor being traded in the secondary market.

Malfeasance in Magallanes

YOU would think that the upper classes who love to lecture their poorer brethren about governance and discipline would practice in their own backyard what they preach in public.

Sadly, this is not the case in Magallanes Village. The homeowners' association is now the subject of an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission after the SEC found out, belatedly, that the association had failed to file the corporate general information sheet for every year from 1981 up to 2000.

As well, the SEC is asking the Magallanes Village Association why it also failed to file the year-end financial statements from 1981 to 1994 and 1999 and 2000.

"Likewise, subject corporation has not communicated with the Commission since 1981 nor has the latter received any information regarding any activity, which would indicate that it is conducting the business for which it was organized or that it is operating," said Rosalina Tividad-Tesorio of the SEC Law and Regulation Division.

The SEC was itself caught sleeping on the job and has only come to know of the Magallanes' reportorial absences after a group of Magallanes homeowners filed a complaint.

The Magallanes protesters were apparently in censed at the MVA board when it increased the monthly association dues to P19 a square a month from P17/sqm, when Bel Air, for example, is just collecting P16/sqm.

According to the grapevine, the board now led by Theresa Mulfeld (president) and Ricardo Cardenas (vice president) had to resort to the increase because the previous board headed by Carmen Castaner had deposited a chunk of the association's operating funds, amounting to P6.5 million, in the shuttered Urban Bank.

HOUNDED by domestic and global uncertainties, local stocks are expected to remain weak as they grope for the bottom of the slump.

"It's still easier to shake the market down at this time rather than inspire it upwards," said a foreign broker, who noted that the market was in dire need of positive news.

The foreign broker, who declined to be named, said the market would still likely be "short" or dominated by sellers this week in the absence of fresh incentives. He noted that two major factors—corporate earnings and peso volatility—would continue to influence the market.

He said most of the second-quarter earnings results have started to come out and should the numbers prove to be disappointing, the market would sell down more stocks. On the other hand, he said positive surprises could boost selective issues.

On the peso side, the broker said the peso would likely firm up due to measures imposed by the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas to control excess liquidity, such as the increase in the bank's reserve requirement.

Irving Ackerman, president of brokerage house L. Ackerman & Co. Inc., agreed that the local stock market was still in a very uneasy state.

"But for the first time in many months, there was a net foreign buying of P159 million on Friday. This could indicate that heavy selling pressures might begin to ease off in the near future and that maybe, foreign buyers are beginning to be attracted to a few issues," Ackerman said.

The main-share Philippine Stock Exchange composite index (Phisix) ended the week slightly lower at 1363.34, 13.02 points or 0.95 percent lower than the weekago level. The upbeat State of the Nation address by President Macapagal failed to bring cheer to the market despite the generally warm reception from the business sector.

Some bargain-hunters emerged during the week, however, lifting the index slightly on Friday.

"We need more volume and the sooner we can have the Securities Regulation Code revised, particularly (the scrapping of) the broker-dealer (segregation) rule, we can improve market liquidity," Ackerman said.

For this week, he said selective issues might continue to attract market interest such as food and beverage giant San Miguel Corp., which is finalizing its acquisition of profitable Cosmos Bottling Corp. whose shares have likewise been sharply rising. He said some activity might also continue in the trading of First Philippine Holdings shares, which have also been doing well despite the bearish market.

"Maybe, and I say, only maybe, we've seen the worst," Ackerman said.

BPI Securities analyst Spencer Yap said the market remained at the crossroads as it hovered near the crucial 1370 level.

"It remains to be seen whether Friday's positive close can be sustained. Positive first-half results from key index issues may spur some buying but the broader market does not seem to have yet found stronger support," Yap said.

SEC suspends rules on stock block sales

BY ELENA R. TORRIJOS

THE SECURITIES and Exchange Commission has suspended its rules on block sales to make way for its approval of counterpart rules proposed by the Philippine Stock Exchange, SEC Chair Lilia Bautista said last week.

Bautista said the PSE's proposed rules liberalizing regular and special block sales should stimulate more market activity, which the regulatory agency wanted to encourage.

Block sales refer to matched trades that do not go through the automated order matching routine of the exchange's trading system but instead have been prearranged by and among the brokers' clients. These trades are entered as done deals directly into the trading system.

The SEC specifically suspended rules 30.2-8a and b, which stated that block sales not subject to tender offer may be allowed provided they were executed by the exchange at a price not inferior to the best bid offer and that all existing bids and offers were satisfied before a transaction can occur that established a new price.

A main feature of the PSE's proposed block sale rules is the disclosure of the issue, price, volume, broker, parties involved and reason for the sale of all approved block sales.

All block sales prior to being booked and confirmed to clients shall first be approved by the exchange. Regular block sales should be approved by two members of the exchange floor trading and arbitration committee, while special block sales should have the nod of four members of the

Keppel unit, Lucio Tan seen joining Highlands project

By DORIS C. DUMLAO

BIG foreign and local investors are keen on joining the group of retail tycoon Henry Sy in a joint venture deal being hatched with property and gaming firm Belle Corp. for the multi-billion-peso development of idle land in leisure estate Tagaytay Highlands.

InQUIRER sources said at least three investors have agreed in principle to join the development Keppel Land Inc., the local property unit of the Keppel group of Singapore; tobacco magnate Lucio Tan, and Geronimo Velasco, chair of publicly listed Republic Glass Holdings Corp. and the former energy minister during the Marcos regime.

The sources said the fourth investor—US-based investment bank Goldman Sachs—has expressed interest but has yet to commit to the project.

The plan is for Belle to spin off more than 600 hectares of core property assets, consisting of subdivision lots and unsold condominium units in Tagaytay Highlands International Golf Club Inc. in Tagaytay City, Cavite and Tagaytay Midlands Golf Club Inc. in Batangas, into a newly created subsidiary called Highlands Prime Leisure Properties Inc.

The source said the investors were simply awaiting Sy, who will anchor the new development, to sign the joint venture deal with Belle Corp. The patriarch of SM Prime Holdings Inc., operator of the biggest shopping mall chain in the country that has a 25 percent stake in Belle.

Highlands Prime, which will have an authorized capital of P3 billion, will initially be 100-percent owned by Belle. However, a substantial stake would be sold to a strategic partner while another 10 percent would be offered to Belle's existing shareholders and to the public through a merger offering originally targeted within the third quarter of this year.

Highlands Prime, with the financial muscle from the Sy-led investor group, is thus envisioned to continue the development in Tagaytay and Batangas over a 50-year master plan. The new development is estimated to cost P4 billion to P5 billion over the medium-term.

The SM group is considering to fold in its other leisure estate developments into the joint venture. It is now developing a 6,000-hectare lot in Hacienda Loco in Batangas into a residential resort similar to the Metro Pacific group's Punta Fuego as well as another vast property across its Taal Vista Hotel in Tagaytay.

The SM group's senior vice president Henry Sy Jr. earlier said the group was strategically positioning itself in the leisure estate business but would not want to risk locking in huge resources in such projects specially now that the real estate sector has yet to recover from the doldrums.

"Highlands Prime is a very good project. We just want to put a substantial meaningful investment but I don't think we'd take over," he said.

The younger Sy confirmed that there was a good possibility that Hacienda Loco would be folded into Highlands Prime because "both are entering to the same (AB) market."

Belle, for its part, is embarking on the spin-off strategy to raise funds and retire debts, consisting of $85.5 million (of which $68.5 million represented outstanding floating rate notes) in dollar debt and another P2 billion owed to several local lenders.

Aside from the FRNs and the local debts, Belle owes German lender Deutsche Bank a bilateral debt of $17 million, although this has already been restructured in the past.

Last May, Belle sought a three-month moratorium on the servicing of these P6.3 billion in debts while bracing for the delay in the signing of the definitive agreement with the Sy-led consortium. The debt relief was intended to pave the way for the restructuring of the foreign component of its total obligations and give Belle some breathing space amid the difficult economic conditions.

The FRNs were the borrowings causing the biggest dent on the company's cash flow and would need to be restructured over the 90-day grace period. However, all the creditors were requested to grant the reprieve in the interest of fairness and uniformity.

CDO issued on G. Cosmos

BY ELENA R. TORRIOS

THE SECURITIES and Exchange Commission issued last week a cease and desist order on G. Cosmos Philippines Inc. for violating the country's Securities Regulation Code, particularly the provisions that prohibit the sale of securities not registered with the regulatory agency.

G. Cosmos Phils., through nationwide television and print ads, promotes the salvation of the world through a supposed high-yielding instrument based on an aggressive advertising campaign of mail-order products sold in Japan.

Based on complaints filed with the SEC, G. Cosmos Phils. failed to deliver on promises that investors would receive 30 percent of profit as advertised to retirees, pensioners and businessmen who were assured of earning as much as P30,000 to P50,000 a month. A member was also assured of getting 5 percent of the profit of other recruits.

The SEC was also investigating reports that Oganin has a criminal record overseas.

SEC documents gathered indicate that G. Cosmos Phils. had engaged in the business of ad planning and production and is an ad agency affiliated with a Tokyo-based company G. Cosmos Co. Ltd.

An SEC official said that G. Cosmos has recruited 20,000 members who were required to pay a one-time membership fee of P3,500 to P6,000 a year. G. Cosmos Phils. operates by collecting money for advertising from the average consumer for its mail order sales business. The money collected is used to conduct mail order sales in Japan through newspaper, television or magazine ads. Profits are paid directly to the people who have paid for the advertising costs. Advertising of various products is done through the company's affiliates in Japan.

The individual who pays the advertising cost of a product receives his or her income on the fifth to 10th day or 20th to 25th day of the month depending on the date of receipt of the statement of account. A person investing in G. Cosmos must execute a G. System Membership Agreement, which embodies details of his investment in the company.

In its cease-and-desist order, the SEC noted that the agreement signed by investors of G. Cosmos Phils. constituted an investment contract, which should be registered with the government agency.

The Securities Regulation Code describes an investment contract as a transaction or scheme for the investment of money where the investment is made in a common enterprise and that there is an expectation of profits and such profits arise primarily from the efforts of others.

Corporate records of G. Cosmos Phils. showed that the company's authorized and paid-up capital was P1 million and P700,000, respectively. Based on the same records, the company is holding office at 16/F Richville Corporate Tower 1107 Industry Street, Madrigal Business Park, Muntinlupa City.

G. Cosmos Phils.' incorporators are Ogam, Yokoi Takahiro, Anselma Calima, Dolores Cuneta and Wilfredo Cuneta.

Investors urge DOJ to act on Wincorp case

MANY of them having sleepless nights worrying over how to meet day-to-day expenses and medical bills, a large group of investors of Westmont Investment Corp. are pressing the Department of Justice to stop dragging its feet and resolve the complaint filed by the Securities and Exchange Commission against the investment house.

In a meeting with INQUIRER Saturday morning, members of the 333 Investors Group Association Inc., which had about P500 million trapped in Wincorp, questioned why the justice department was taking longer than the period prescribed in deciding the case against Wincorp.

333 Investors Association chair Oscar Gankee said the group was willing to give the DOJ until Aug. 15 this year to resolve the case, after which the group would consider possible mass actions and public appeals to the President to pressure the department to do its duty.

Augustin Vestil, assisting lawyer for the investors group, pointed out that the SEC case against Wincorp filed with the DOJ was already submitted for resolution last March 29. Under the rules, the DOJ should resolve the case within 45 to 60 days after the submission.

In a complaint affidavit filed with the DOJ last year the SEC accused Wincorp directors and officers, including its former chair, John Espiritu, of violating the country's securities laws when they failed to register an investment scheme with the SEC.

The SEC accused Espiritu, son of former Finance Secretary Edgardo Espiritu, and Wincorp directors Henry Cua Loping, Simeon Cua, Manuel Tanquiansee and Alfonso Reyno III of fraud for enticing about a thousand investors to place some P7 billion that Wincorp re-lent to 19 companies, mostly owned by the younger Espiritu and his father's associates. These companies have defaulted on these loans.

Wincorp president and director Antonio Ong has admitted that Wincorp is 99-percent owned by UniOil Resources and Holdings Co. Inc. and that 82 percent of UniOil's stockholders are also borrowers of the company. Elena R. Torrijos

Cocktales

executive herself

The President, in her best diplomatic self, provided a clue to the industry's decline: the local industry lost its guaranteed US sales and could not compete with its foreign competitors after Washington finally cut off the Philippine quota.

One leading shoe chain owner, who asked not to be identified, told Cocktales he has steadily switched his chain's orders to mainland China if he wants his business to stay alive.

Reason? Shorter production cycle — two weeks as against 60 days from Marikina, consistent quality and, despite the freight and customs duties, cheaper unit cost.

Short takes

• THE supplier group behind the aborted test flights of a Singaporean assembled spy plane over Basilan is led by retired General Victor Mayo, Jose Belizano, and retired Admira. De Leon.

This year, the Mayo group has reportedly cornered some P1.8-billion worth of business from the armed forces.

• TIMOTHY Harbert, the president of State Street Global Advisors, the second largest investment fund in the United States with over $750 billion under its management, is in town to see President Macapagal-Arroyo, Finance Secretary Jose Isidro Camacho, and the heads of SSS/GSIS.

Harbert apparently wants to make a pitch to manage the SSS/GSIS funds that the two GFs plan to invest overseas.

The Boston-based executive is here on invitation of businessman Jose Marcel Panlilio, whose holdings could themselves use a fresh injection of equity.

Heard through the grapevine

NEWLY-minted Congressman Mark Jimenez has been telling friends that he has acquired two of the four penthouses at the Pacific Plaza condominium on Ayala Avenue from tycoon Henry Sy.

The adjoining, two-level penthouses were never finished and have remained unoccupied after the Sy boys decided that they would rather raise their children on houses with expansive lawns.

Napocor earnings from one-day power sales jump 46%

BY RONNELL
W. DOMINGO

NATIONAL Power Corp. reported Friday it earned P445.8 million from its one-day power sales scheme from January to June this year, up 45.92 percent from the year-ago figure of P305.5 million.

Alberto C. Guanzon, chief of Napocor's power network business department, said the earnings brought the state firm's cumulative revenues from the scheme to P1.7 billion since it was started in June 1998.

Guanzon noted that the increase in revenues was due to the brisk daily bidding for Napocor's unused capacity.

"The first semester earnings also represent almost half of our full-year revenue target of P1 billion," Guanzon said in a statement.

He added that sales got a boost from the Manila Electric Co.'s aggressive campaign for its "embedded" customers to take part in the program.

THIS series on Philippine Banking history is published in the business section of the Philippine Daily Inquirer in commemoration of the 150th year of the Bank of the Philippine Islands (BPI), formerly El Banco Español Filipino de Isabel II (The Spanish Filipino Bank of Isabel II), the first bank to be established in the Philippines and Southeast Asia.

PHILIPPINE BANKING

Did you know?

... that various coins were in circulation in the Philippines during the latter years of the Spanish regime?

In the 19th century, coins of various sizes and origin found their way in the Philippines and became accepted means of exchange. These were Spanish, Philippine and Mexican (as well as other Latin American) coins, in silver and gold of varying fineness.

But complications arose when an intrinsically lower-value Mexican silver currency officially became part of the Philippine currency system in the 1870s. Hoarding of the gold coins became common, and replaced by the debased Mexican coins smuggled into the Philippines.

To curb the growing confusion and monetary instability, the insular government pulled out in 1886 all Mexican money in circulation in the Philippines.

UN report says IT, communications promote human development

BY ERWIN LEMUEL G. OLIVA

"THE TECHNOLOGY divide does not have to follow the income divide. Throughout history, technology has been a powerful tool for human development and poverty reduction," the Human Development Report 2001 of the United Nations Development Program stated.

This report was presented at a forum last week in Manila.

Contrary to earlier beliefs that only rich countries would gain access from technological innovations, the report said that benefits gained from investments in technology would later trickle down to poor nations.

"It is often thought that people gain access to technological innovations—more effective medicine or transportation, the telephone or the Internet—once they have more income. This is true. But the process can be reversed: investments in technology can equip people with better tools and make them more productive and prosperous," the report said.

Under the New Economy, information could be rapidly spread at low cost to people through ICT. The Internet is now breaking barriers of geography. Distance education or telemedicine are innovations that will lead to better and healthier lives for Filipinos, the report added.

The report also said that ICT provides powerful new ways for citizens to demand accountability from their governments and in the use of public resources.

The report, for instance, cited the role of ICT in the ouster of former President Joseph Estrada during EDSA II early this year.

"Technology can cause discontinuous change: a single innovation can quickly and significantly change the course of an entire society," the report said.

With President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's call for the end of corruption in government in a year, the Internet, the mobile telephone (specifically SMS) and other technologies now enable Filipinos to communicate and obtain information in ways never before available, opening up opportunities to influence government decisions that directly affect their lives.

"Technology is a tool, not just a reward, for growth and development," the report suggested.

When Ms Macapagal started talking about information and communications technology during her State of the Nation Address (Sona), she knew that this industry would mean more jobs and eventually wealth, for Filipinos.

In her Sona, she believes that ICT is the source of "fast-growing industries where high-value jobs are most plentiful."

Let's be accused of propagating empty promises again, the UNDP report acknowledged that ICT opens new employment and export opportunities.

The report pointed out that India's revenues gained from the ICT industry increased from $150 million in 1990 to $4 billion in 1999.

This happened considering that technology in that country is unevenly diffused. Most of the wealth created by the ICT industry comes from Bangalore, a small enclave of high-tech companies in a country where the average adult receives only 5.1 years of education, adult illiteracy is 44 percent, electricity consumption is half that in China, and teledensity is 28 telephones for every 1,000 people.

The report, however, admitted that technological progress is often the response to market pressures, and not the needs of poor, marginalized people.

Meanwhile, most research and development activities worldwide are still concentrated in rich countries.

Technology remains unevenly diffused in the world. According to the report, 79 percent of the world's Internet users come from the rich countries. Africa, for instance, has lower international bandwidth than São Paulo, Brazil, while Latin America's pipes to the global Internet is as big as that of Seoul of the Republic of South Korea.

Access to funding is also concentrated in North America where venture capitalists have thrived. In developing countries, there is little access to funding. This problem is often compounded by the lack of intellectual property protection, which often discourages private investors, the report said.

Also, huge inequalities exist between countries on access to skills and education for effective use of technology, the report added.

"Developing may gain especially high rewards from new technologies, but they also face severe challenges in managing the risks," the report said.

NCC chief insists on 'status quo'

BY ERWIN OLIVA

THE EMBATTLED chief of the National Computer Center (NCC), Ramon "Ike" Señeres, holds on to his post despite the expiration of the temporary restraining order (TRO) he filed barring presidential appointee Delfin "Jay" Sabido IX from taking over his post.

The TRO expired on Thursday, "technically" forcing out the incumbent director general from the government agency.

In a letter issued by the Office of the Solicitor General (OSG) to Science Secretary Estrella Alabastro, Assistant Solicitor General Antonio Villamor said that the 60-day TRO issued by the Court of Appeals on May 24 has expired.

In the same letter, Villamor said that "no hearing was conducted on the motion for preliminary injunction nor was any order granting it" within the 60-day period. The TRO is "deemed automatically vacated," he said. The TRO ordered Sabido and other respondents acting for him to "cease and desist" from removing Señeres from the NCC, thereby preventing him from exercising his duties in the said office.

In a telephone interview, Señeres acknowledged that the TRO has indeed expired, but maintained that he remains the incumbent.

"It's a customary practice that when the case is still in the court, status quo per res," he said.

Sabido was appointed chief of the computer agency on March 2, yet Señeres has been contesting the post, insisting on his security of tenure.

He filed a TRO at the fifth division of the Manila Court of Appeals on May 24, arguing that Sabido's appointment as director general of the NCC was "illegal."

Sabido took his oath on May 15 as the new chief of the computer agency. He was executive director of the Advanced Science and Technology Institute, an agency under the Department of Science and Technology (DOST), prior to his appointment as NCC chief.

PRESIDENT Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, giving importance to information and communications technology (ICT) which she described as the leading sector for economic growth, met Thursday in Malacañang with the officers of the Information Technology and E-Commerce Council (ITECC). Her involvement in ICT matters and the actual use of technology was further heightened Saturday when she participated in the country's an "electronic town meeting" with the President.

As chair of the ITECC, the President approved in principle the implementation of four vital ICT projects that would bring the Philippines to the knowledge economy, according to a Malacañang press statement. The ITECC is the country's highest policymaking body.

The four vital projects she mentioned were the Bonifacio IT Plaza development project, the Pagasa (Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical, Astronomical Services Administration) modernization program, the Human Resource Cluster Action Plan and the Philippine Research, Education and Government Information Network (Preginet).

The Bonifacio IT Plaza development project is envisioned to be a showcase of Philippine IT capability. It will also be a physical hub and focal point for the country's IT and software industry providing entrepreneurs, enterprises and the government with globally competitive ICT infrastructure. The Pagasa six-year modernization project is needed for the establishment of regional weather forecasting centers all over the country. The Human Resources Action Plan targets 60,000 professionals in three years, increasing by 10,000 starting on the fifth year, and the retasking of 100,000 teachers in five years. Meanwhile, the strategic objective of Preginet is to link the government, academe and research institutes through a nationwide broadband network to enable e-governance and improve the country's science and technology capability.

This knowledge economy project will encourage collaborative research and development in new and emerging technologies. It will also provide a platform for experimentation of innovative Internet applications and services and encourage much-needed research in these advanced areas by establishing connectivity to international research networks and to the Internet.

The decision for the President to chair the ITECC was announced during the June 26 meeting in Malacañang to fast track decisions on critical issues that should be addressed at a higher level.

Executive Order (EO) No. 18, dated May 25, 2001, was issued amending EO 264, which created the ITECC. EO 18 reconstituted the ITECC with the President as chair, the trade secretary and a private sector representative as co-chairs, and eight government and seven private sector representatives as members.

Meanwhile, Filipinos here and abroad were treated to a rare opportunity to talk to Ms Macapagal on Saturday through an electronic town meeting.

"This is a symbol that the Philippines is progressively heading toward the 21st century," said Ms Macapagal of her virtual meeting which lasted one hour and five minutes.

From the central studio of a television network, the President answered questions from selected participants hooked up through satellite. The participants, who came from various regions in the country, represented a mix of social classes.

An official of the Securities and Exchange Commission asked for Ms Macapagal's assurance to uplift the economy amid the dwindling peso.

A vegetable farmer from Baguio appealed for the immediate construction of farm-to-market roads so they can sell their harvests.

A female worker in a shoe factory in Marikina asked if the President could institute measures to protect the local shoe industry amid foreign competitors.

In response, Ms Macapagal reiterated her administration's programs outlined in her State of the Nation Address. She said she intends to fulfill her commitment to provide jobs, education, housing and food for the millions of poor Filipinos.

"Ten years from now, I hope to see a Philippines no longer mired in poverty," said Ms Macapagal when asked about her wish for the country.

IT firms now more wary of PR, advertising costs

HIGH-TECH firms are finding creative ways to market their products and services nowadays amid the global slowdown. Some, however, are feeling the pinch and have decided to decrease spending on marketing, particularly advertising.

RJ Maclang, marketing manager of Intel Microelectronics Philippines, admitted that Intel has decreased its marketing budget this year.

"We've had a decrease in marketing budget this year for obvious reasons. One of them is that Intel is putting its resources in other things like education and research and development. There's been a decrease in spending for marketing despite healthy PC sales during the first half of 2001," Maclang said.

Worldwide, Intel is allocating $4.2 billion on research and development activities and $7.5 billion on capital expenditures for 2001.

Asked how much was slashed from its marketing budget, Maclang said that it was in "double digits."

"We're now becoming creative, staying away from spending on advertisements and (focusing) more on non-media promotions for a targeted audience," he said.

He added that TV ads are out, but the company has recently put its money on Internet advertising.

"Our products are now being positioned for the consumer market. The Pentium 4, for instance, targets consumers. Selling to consumers requires more money, but right now our budget is limited," he added.

Cielo Narvaez, marketing communications specialist of Hewlett-Packard Philippines, for her part, pointed out that there was "not much of a change" in the company's spending on advertisements, marketing and press relations amid the gloom market.

"We're more conservative with our expenses," she said.

Mac Rivera, marketing communications manager of Microsoft Philippines, shared the same view.

"The way I see it, the money we spent on advertising remained the same although we would like to be more creative. We're now big on events especially with the scheduled launch of Windows XP in the Philippines," Rivera said.

Microsoft Philippines is exploring new ways to promote its products and services in the country. But it does not mean the company is cutting down on spending on marketing, Rivera said.

"As far as I'm concerned, we have a lot of events coming this year. So we're not really scrapping," she added. "Admittedly, however, the global slowdown has generally affected everyone."

Myra Salvosa, managing director of local public relations (PR) firm The Partners Group Inc., has a different view on the matter.

The Partners Group was established in 1996, and has since been serving different clients in the high-tech industry, including Apple Philippines, Hughes Network Systems, Iberpacific, Microsoft Great Plains Business Solutions, MosCom and Siemens Inc.

She said that PR work is tougher this year because IT companies, particularly the giants, expect "quantity and quality."

"Advertisers have gone down by as much as 50 percent," Salvosa said. "Our clients are now very discriminating. The company has to add value to the usual PR work. Our job does not only involve writing and releasing press releases anymore."

Salvosa, however, believes PR firms with clients in high-tech are lucky than other firms working for non-IT firms. She said that IT companies use PR firms to explain their products to people. Advertising, to IT companies, is becoming a secondary medium for promoting their products and services, she said.

Meanwhile, Mel Dominguez, president and CEO of local PR firm Dominguez Marketing Communications Inc., said that IT firms find "value" in companies specializing in PR work for high-tech companies. Her clients include Cisco, Veritas Software, Compaq, EMC, DataOne and Anixter. The company was established in 1997.

"Instead of investing in advertising, they get PR agencies. That was my experience back in 1998 and even now," Dominguez said.

Dominguez, however, admitted that some of her clients have decreased spending on marketing this year.

US GDP growth weakest in 8 yrs.

WASHINGTON—The US economy endured its weakest growth rate in eight years in the second quarter as American companies cut back on investment spending by the biggest amount in two decades.

Resilient consumers kept the economy afloat, although just barely, as the gross domestic product—the country's total output of goods and services—eased out a tiny 0.7-percent growth rate in the April-June quarter.

Looking for glimmers of hope in the midst of a slowdown that began last summer, many analysts say they believe the country has now passed the maximum danger point for a recession. They forecast steady improvement for the rest of this year.

"I think we have seen the bottom for this economic cycle," Sung Won Sohn, chief economist at Wells Fargo in Minneapolis, said. "Consumers have prevented the economy from sliding off a cliff and now they will be getting some help."

'Puttering along'

Sohn and other analysts point to falling interest rates, lower energy prices and the $40 billion in tax rebate checks that taxpayers have started to receive as positive developments.

"While we're still skating on the edge of a recession, I think the outlook for the economy is now quite encouraging," said Bill Cheney, chief economist at John Hancock Financial Services in Boston. The current economic expansion is now in a record 11th year.

President Bush, who was accused by Democrats of tanking down the economy as a way to sell his tax cut program, said Friday's GDP report showed how important it was that Congress approved a package that included rebate checks to get relief into consumers' hands quickly.

"The economy is putting along. It is not nearly as strong as it should be," Bush told members of the Future Farmers of America at the White House.

Wall Street saw the weak GDP report as confirmation of the string of the dismal second quarter earnings reports it had been seeing. The Dow Jones industrial average ended the day down 38.96 at 8,416.67. For the week, the Dow lost 159.98 points.

Lawrence Lindsey, the president's chief economist, said in a CNN interview, "we have seen the worst of times already." He predicted the economy would return to robust growth in 2002.

Rates cut

Many analysts said they looked for growth to rebound to around 2 percent in the current quarter and 3.5 percent in the fourth quarter. They predicted that the Federal Reserve would cut rates for a seventh time at its Aug. 21 meeting to help the recovery along.

The Fed would have room to cut rates further because of an absence of inflation. An inflation gauge used to the GDP showed prices rising by just 1.7 percent in the second quarter, the best performance since early 1999.

The 0.7-percent GDP increase, the fourth straight quarter of sub-par activity, was the poorest showing since the GDP actually shrank by 0.1 percent in the first quarter of 1993. The GDP for the first quarter of this year was revised to a rate of 1.3 percent.

The slowdown that started in the summer of 2000

US sidesteps recession; worst may be over

NEW YORK—US business investment collapsed in the first half of the year, corporations slashed jobs at the fastest pace in a decade and excess production capacity in industry grew to levels not seen since the 1980s.

It might have felt like a recession, but it wasn't one.

The slowdown has not met the textbook definition of a recession—two straight quarters of declining gross domestic product. Many Wall Street economists now say the worst is probably behind the United States, and they expect growth to pick up speed in the second half of the year.

But some warn there are still significant risks in that outlook, the main one being that mounting job cuts will crimp consumer confidence and consumer spending, which accounts for two-thirds of US economic activity.

"We're in the first half was the weakest part of the slowdown," said Merrill Lynch chief economist Bruce Steinberg.

The government said Friday that GDP grew at an ever-so-slight 0.7-percent pace in the second quarter, slower than the 1.3-percent rate in the first quarter.

Economists agree the Federal Reserve's deep interest rate cuts since the beginning of the year helped avert a recession. Further, sluggish growth has reduced the threat of inflation, meaning the Fed can be comfortable cutting rates further, as it is expected to do at its upcoming August 21 policy meeting.

"We've avoided a recession and we'll continue to avoid it," said Wayne Ayers, chief economist at FleetBoston Financial. Reuters was the result of a campaign by the Fed to raise interest rates in an effort to keep tight labor markets from making inflation worse. When the severity of the downturn became evident, the Fed reversed course in January and began cutting interest rates.

Fears

While most economists were optimistic that the nation will be able to avoid a recession, some worried that the unrelenting problems in manufacturing, which lost 785,000 jobs in the last year, could spill over to the rest of the economy if consumers suddenly stopped spending because of fears about their own jobs. There were also fears of spreading weakness overseas.

"A sharp deterioration in growth overseas and the continuing impact of an overvalued dollar are wreaking havoc on companies' ability to export," said Jerry Jasnowski, president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

More Americans struggled with card payments in May

NEW YORK—More Americans struggled to make their monthly credit card payments in May, as credit card issuers wrote off more bad loans than year-ago levels for a fourth straight month, bond rating agency Moody's Investors Service said Friday.

Moody's credit card "charge-off" index, which gauges the level of loan write-offs, rose to 6.62 percent in May from 6.02 percent a year earlier and was up 33 basis points (or 33 hundredths of a percentage point) from April's level.

This deterioration in consumer credit quality is precarious at a time when consumer spending has largely kept the economy from slipping into a recession, according to economists.

Worsening credit quality has coincided with a gloomy job picture for Americans, saddled with debt loads not seen since the mid-1980s, as Corporate America seems to be cutting their payrolls by thousands on a daily basis.

According to the Federal Reserve Board, the average American household spent 14.35 percent of its income to pay off consumer and mortgage loans during the first three months of the year. That figure is the second highest ever, just below the 14.38 percent for the fourth quarter of 1986 since the Fed began this data series in 1980.

Moody's partly blamed the rise in charge-offs on a spike in personal bankruptcy filings earlier this year, as borrowers rushed to file before stringent bankruptcy reform was enacted, which would make it harder for them to wipe out their debt.

"Non-business bankruptcy filings, which rose to near-second highs in the first quarter of 2001, were again partly responsible, as most credit card issuers write off bankrupt accounts within 60 days of receiving notice," Moody's said in its latest credit card report.

Non-business US bankruptcy filings rose to 356,836 in the first quarter, the highest since the second quarter of 1998.

This negative trend in card losses would unlikely end soon because the rate of card payment delinquency in May ran above its year-ago level for a sixth consecutive month, Moody's said.

It is typical that a portion of the delinquent loans eventually becomes uncollectable and has to be written off by card issuers.

British GDP growth slows to 2.1% in Q2

LONDON—The British economy grew at its slowest rate for more than two years through the second quarter, official figures showed Friday, as the US slowdown and the foot-and-mouth crisis threw the brakes on one of Europe's powerhouse economies.

Economic growth slowed up to an annual rate of 2.1 percent in the April-June period from 2.7 percent in the previous quarter according to the Office for National Statistics.

Britain's finance minister, Gordon Brown, said the economic slowdown was likely to get worse in the coming months, but insisted that Britain was well placed to resist the worst that the US downturn could do.

Brown said when he met fellow European finance ministers several weeks ago, "we agreed that it may not yet have reached its bottom, but at the same time we are better placed than we have been in the past because of our monetary policy changes with the Bank of England to cope with the uncertainties."

"But it does mean that each continent has got to play its part in restoring growth," he told the BBC in New York, where he has been meeting business leaders.

The growth rate compared with that of the previous three-month period was even more sluggish at just 0.3 percent, the lowest quarterly growth rate since the winter of 1998, the British government statistics agency said.

The new figures did not surprise the City. Analysts had penciled in similar forecasts, the stock market remained buoyant on Friday and the pound was little changed against the dollar or the Euro.

Many noted that Britain remained far more buoyant than other industrialized countries, particularly Germany and the United States.

"Britain is nowhere near a recession," said Barclays Stockbrokers' economist Hilary Cook.

"The fact is that the UK economy is still very strong," she said, adding that the recent outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease had probably knocked 0.3 percentage points off 12-month economic growth.

"There was some anecdotal evidence that the champagne tents (at summer sporting events) were much quieter than normal, which must mean a recession is coming," Cook said. "But there seemed to be plenty going down at Henley (rowing regatta)."

If there is a problem in the British economy at present, it is that the manufacturing sector is flirting with recession while the service sector powers ahead.

POLICY SHIFT

Arguments for and against a strong dollar

WASHINGTON—Recent comments from the White House and the US Treasury department about the dollar's strength have left financial markets wondering if there has been a shift away from the traditional strong dollar policy.

But despite calls from a powerful lobby of exporters for the Bush administration to engineer a weaker dollar, US officials insist that policy is unchanged.

The discussion has drawn attention to the dollar, which has appreciated by 30 percent in trade-weighted terms since 1995, and ignited the debate about the advantages and disadvantages of the strength of the US currency.

Here are the key points in the discussion.

Reasons to have a strong dollar

• A strong dollar should help keep inflation low as imports are cheaper.

"A weaker dollar has consequences for the inflationary outlook," said Robert Hormats, vice chair of Goldman Sachs.

Some analysts are skeptical, though, about how much the strong dollar has really been instrumental in keeping inflation under control. "It has probably helped keep inflation down but not had a major impact. It may be worth a few tenths of a percent to the strength of the US currency," said Michael Rosenberg, chief foreign exchange strategist at Deutsche Bank in New York.

Some analysts also say that a weaker dollar could actually lead to slower US growth. "We had a weak dollar in the '70s but that was not good either because it raises the costs of capital and so the United States can't keep up with competitiveness in other countries and we lose jobs," said David Mulpass, chief international economist at Bear Stearns.

• Growth is sluggish in the euro area and in Japan so, if the dollar is strong and the currencies of those countries are weaker, it should give them a better chance at economic recovery. "It has Europe, but I'm not sure it has helped Japan yet, but in principle it should do, everything else being equal," said Rosenberg.

• A strong dollar provides a good safe haven place for cash in times of financial market crisis. Analysts say that capital inflows from investors pulling out of emerging markets in recent years during a series of crises including Asia and Russia and now Argentina and Turkey, has been one of the key reasons for dollar strength.

• Any significant change in the strength of the dollar risks upsetting financial markets around the world. The United States absorbs a record 64 percent of all capital flows in the world today. So a 1-percent shift in global asset allocation away from the dollar would amount to a $300-billion outflow from the United States, according to Deutsche Bank research.

Reasons to have a weaker dollar

• The Federal Reserve has cut interest rates by 2-3/4 percentage points so far this year, but analysts say the impact of the cuts is, in part, being undermined by the strength of the dollar, which undermines competitiveness.

• A strong dollar is one of the factors cited by economists as having boosted inflation in other countries, particularly in Europe. Most notably, Bank of England Governor Edward George said the strong dollar was "one of the factors" contributing to higher inflation in the euro-zone.

• There are risks for emerging markets, such as Argentina, with a peg or partial peg to the dollar and also for those trying to make payments on dollar-denominated assets. "It makes their goods and services more expensive to the rest of the world, and it makes their domestic assets more expensive to non-dollar investment, which puts pressure on the pegs," said Arnab Das, head of global emerging market strategy at a Dresdner Bank. The strong dollar is of particular concern for Argentina because a large part of its trade is with Europe and Brazil where the currencies have depreciated against the dollar, which means they have lost competitiveness, he adds.

• The stronger the dollar gets (and some argue the more overvalued it becomes against other currencies like the euro) the more potential there is for a correction, which could wreak havoc across world financial markets. In a recent report, the International Monetary Fund cited a drop in the value of the US dollar and unwinding of fiscal imbalances in the United States as one of the key risks in the global economy.

• The strong dollar is depressing US exports, particularly in the manufacturing sector. The National Cotton Council and the United Auto Workers on Thursday joined the growing chorus of those complaining about the strong dollar. Two weeks ago, a powerful lobby that included the National Association of Manufacturers, the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organization, and the American Farm Bureau wrote to Bush asking for a weaker dollar. They said the strong dollar was threatening to tip the US and the global economy into recession. The group says that the strong dollar is encouraging US businesses to move their production lines abroad or closing down altogether, risking US jobs. As foreign trade makes up about 12 percent of US gross domestic product, some say that the cries of the exporters should not be ignored.

US protection against Asian textiles sought

WASHINGTON—Governors from the major US textile-producing region are asking President George Bush for protection against Asian imports, which they say are causing massive job losses and plant closures in their states.

In seeking the protection, the governors, on behalf of the textile industry, are hoping Bush extends the same type of helping hand he already has offered the US steel industry.

On June 5, Bush asked the US International Trade Commission to investigate whether steel imports are harming US companies, the first step toward imposing import controls.

The governors of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, in a letter dated July 23, said the "deepening crisis in the Americas textile industry" required similar action.

Officials at the US Trade Representative's office were not available for comment on the governors' request.

But Thursday, USTR Robert Zoellick told a Washington trade group he was sympathetic to developing countries' desire for greater access to global textile markets.

"Would I like to open our market more to textiles? You bet," Zoellick said, noting imports were just as important to America's prosperity as exports.

The US textile industry, which employs nearly 500,000 workers nationwide, has lost more than 10 percent of its workforce in the past year, according to the southern governors.

In May alone, they said, 9,000 US textile workers lost their jobs and more than a dozen mills closed.

The governors placed the blame directly on "the tidal wave of unfairly low-priced Asian imports that have flooded our country in recent years."

The cost of those imports had fallen on average of 40 percent, they said, largely because of currency devaluations in 1997-1998 related to an economic downturn in Asia.

Carlos Moore, executive vice president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, said in an interview the currencies of Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Malaysia, India, Pakistan and Bangladesh were all set at suspiciously low levels given the economic rebound in many of them.

Those countries, he said, were among the top 25 textile exporters globally.

Moore said besides seeking an investigation that could lead to import controls, the US textile industry was seeking several other actions from the administration.

Those include a clamp-down on illegal textile imports into the United States, pressuring Asian countries to better-align their currency values with economic conditions and using bilateral and multilateral negotiations to bring down Asian countries' barriers to US textiles.

Moore added that pressure on the administration would continue as textile-state members of Congress were now gathering signatures for their own letter to Bush, "asking him to take some action."

United, US Airways scrap merger plans

WASHINGTON—United Airlines and US Airways Group Inc abandoned their bid to join forces and create the world's biggest carrier on Friday after the US Justice Department said it would go to court to block the deal.

United's parent company, UAL Corp., agreed to pay a $50-million break-up fee and US Airways said it would begin developing its future strategy after the companies' last-ditch effort to win antitrust approval failed.

The Justice Department's antitrust division said it would oppose the $4.3-billion acquisition by UAL because of concerns the combination of the No. 2 and No. 6 US airlines would mean higher fares and fewer choices for air travelers.

The acquisition of US Airways would crimp competition on more than 30 airline routes, the department said. It had been expecting 12 states to also oppose the deal.

"If this acquisition were allowed to proceed, millions of consumers would have little choice but to pay higher fares and accept lower-quality air service," Atty. General John Ashcroft said in a statement.

The agency's move came after the companies made a failed 11th-hour effort to overcome antitrust concerns before an Aug. 1 deadline the Justice Department faced for deciding whether to oppose the acquisition.

US Airways expressed disappointment at the government's decision but said it would move on.

"With today's announcement by the Department of Justice, US Airways and its employees will be moving forward with a plan to address the competitive environment," the airline said in a statement.

Under the deal first proposed more than a year ago, United would have paid Arlington, Virginia-based US Airways $4.3 billion in cash and would have assumed about $8 billion in debt.

United, the world's No. 2 airline, had moved to break off the deal earlier this month, citing the department's antitrust concerns but US Airways refused to drop the deal at that time. Both airlines later asked for a final Justice Department verdict.

BUSINESS

BSP cuts liquidity target

BY CLARISSA S. BATINO

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas said Friday that it would cut its money supply target by 2 percentage points to 13 percent, as the economy was unlikely to pick up soon.

"The 15-percent target (in domestic liquidity) would definitely be reduced, unless the economy catches up, which is less likely. The research department is still firming up the numbers," BSP Governor Rafael Bautista told reporters.

A person familiar with the matter said the central bank was looking at a target of 13 percent.

On Thursday, the BSP decided to raise commercial banks' liquidity reserve requirements by 2 percentage points to 9 percent.

With the statutory reserve requirement steady at 9 percent, the total reserve requirement would stand at 18 percent.

Statutory reserves should be in cash or on deposit with the central bank, while liquidity reserves can be invested in government securities yielding market rates of interest.

The central bank also reduced the amount of over-the-counter dollar sales of commercial banks to $5,000 from $10,000.

Both measures took effect Friday.

But the central bank's policy-making Monetary Board kept the tiering system for its overnight borrowing facility intact. Such a move was seen as a way to cap an expected rise in inflation from an increase in money supply and to siphon away excess liquidity, which could be used to speculate on the peso.

Peso to recover to 47, 'prophet of boom' says

BY DORIS C. DUMLAO

DIRECT foreign investments would lift the peso to as high as 47 to a dollar in the second half of the year, University of Asia and the Pacific economist Bernardo Villegas said Friday.

In a news conference, Villegas, the country's "prophet of boom," brushed aside fears of a major export slowdown, saying it was still possible for the country to attain a 6.7-percent growth in exports this year.

"If the inflows of foreign direct investments turn especially bullish in the second half of 2001, the peso-dollar rate could strengthen to 47 to a dollar. Although this may sound overly optimistic, the most recent Big Mac index of The Economist showed that the Philippine peso is undervalued by a whopping 54 percent in relation to the US dollar," he said.

"The recent depreciation of the peso to more than 54 to a dollar is mainly due to external forces like the yen and Thai baht depreciation and not to any inherent weaknesses in the Philippine economy," he added.

Villegas said investments from blue-chip companies abroad like America Online, Caltex and Barnesandnoble.com should help augment the country's dollar supply and give the peso relief from speculative attacks.

"Given the annual growth rate of 4.1 percent between 1993 and 1999, Philippine software exports in 2001 are expected to grow at more than 50 percent. In addition to call centers, there's a proliferation of medium-sized companies exporting medical transcription, finance and accounting, animation, human resources, website design and other IT-enabled services," he said.

BSP to allow buy-back deals

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas and the Bureau of Treasury will sign with banks and investment houses a memorandum of agreement legitimizing "buyback deals" to provide lenders with a cheaper option to boost liquidity during times of heavy withdrawals.

BSP Deputy Governor Alberto Reyes said the BSP, BTR, Bankers Association of the Philippines and the Investment Houses Association of the Philippines were still firming up details of the agreement.

The agreement would allow banks to temporarily sell their government securities to other banks or investment houses without the burden of a reserve requirement, Reyes said.

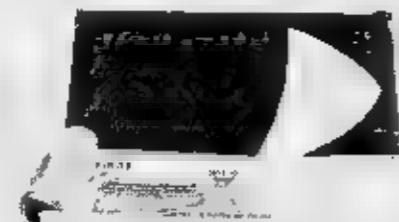

A buyback arrangement refers to a temporary sale of any security wherein the seller has an obligation to buy back the asset at a pre-agreed time and price.

BUSINESS Monday

KELLOGG'S FIRST NON-AMERICAN DEAN

Asian teaches Westerners how to run businesses

By TINA ARCEO-DUMLAO

MANAGEMENT styles have evolved considerably since the time when business schools started offering master's degrees in business administration more than 50 years ago.

Managers who controlled everything from his desk gave way to those who were able to effectively delegate authority. Conglomerates gave way to small but specialized companies, and lately, the Internet has changed virtually everything in the way business is conducted.

One thing, however, has remained the same and that is the need to invest in people, and in helping employees move up the ladder. In these times when many corporations are wealthier than some countries, human resource management has fallen by the wayside.

Those who help their subordinates become better people are the real managers, according to Dipak C. Jain, the new dean of the Kellogg Graduate School of Management of the Northwestern University.

Jain said in an interview during his short visit with Kellogg alumni in the Philippines last week, that finding the best methods of harnessing the rich human resource of the companies poses one of the biggest challenges facing managers in the future.

"This is one of my passions. I believe that the role of management is not just to go up the ladder but to get people to go up with them. Sometimes we focus too much on making corporations improve, not so much the individuals," Jain stresses.

To achieve this, Jain says managers of the future should have superior communication skills, having the ability to get their thoughts across and getting people to do them. And the first step to communicating is listening.

"You have to be a listener first before you can be a good communicator," Jain says.

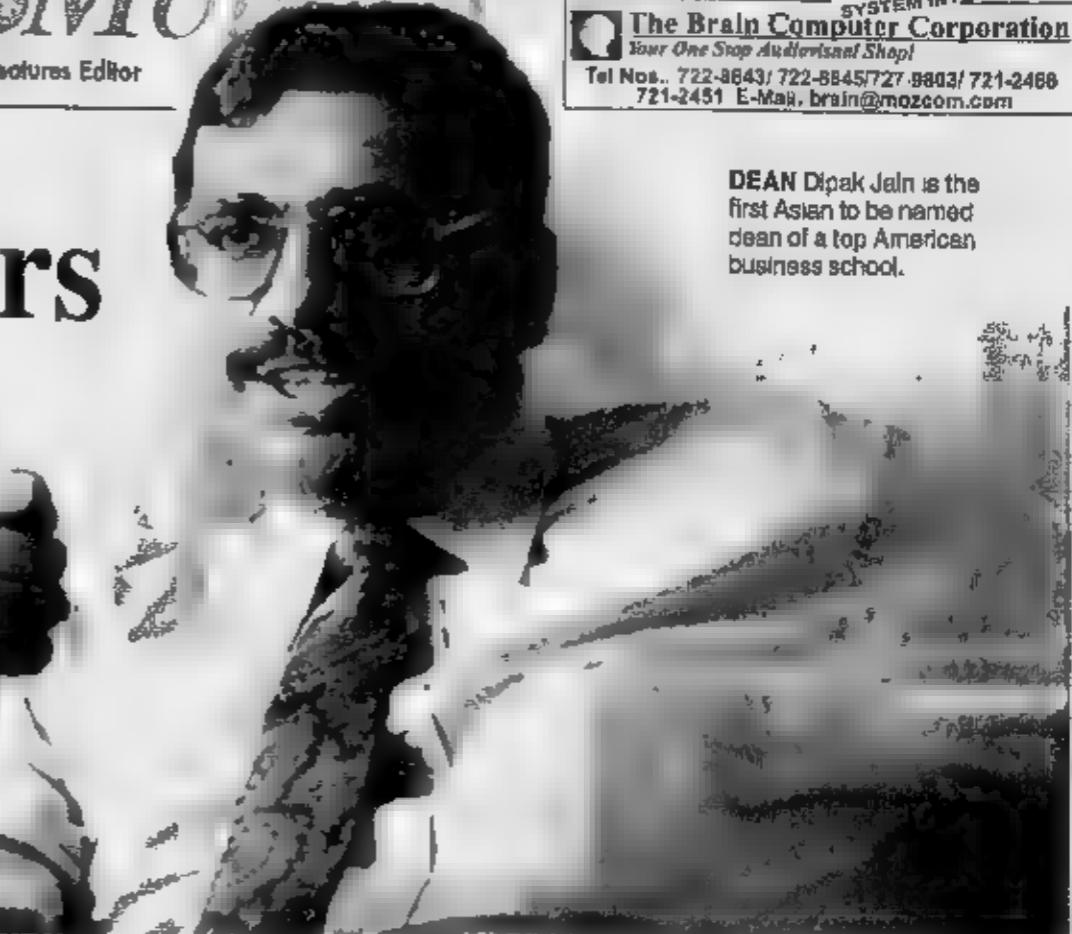

A good manager must also have an eye for good talent, to be able to spot a person with a good potential for growth. It is like seeing the diamond in the rough. He says it is the manager's duty to cut away at the layers of stone to get to the jewel within.

"Managers must also have passion for what they are doing. They will not do well if they have no heart for what they are doing and they must also have the desire to help the people around them," he says.

Another requisite, he says, is for managers to have the desire for continuous learning no matter how high they are in the corporate ladder. They must know that they don't know everything, especially these days when the nature of corporations is changing almost by the day.

Jain says business schools like Kellogg continue to change their curriculum to adapt to these changes as quickly as possible.

At Kellogg, Jain says they are looking at new me-jobs or areas of concentration to suit the demands of today. One of these new areas is biotechnology and media management or knowing how to leverage information for increased profitability.

"We also noticed that companies these days want short-term MBA programs for their executives and they want them tailor-fit for their needs. Management education has definitely become a lifelong activity," he says.

Jain is expected to implement many changes at Kellogg following his appointment last July 1 as Kellogg's top administrator. He is the first Asian and one of the youngest at 43 years old to head the prestigious graduate school for business.

Being an Indian, he is also the first non-Caucasian to head any of the top business schools in the United States. Kellogg is ranked among the top five graduate schools in the US, along with Wharton and Harvard.

On a personal note, the gracious Jain says his appointment was announced in his native India via full-page articles that made him something of a celebrity. He adds that his appointment was met by a lot of enthusiasm by Indians as well as other Asians.

"I should give credit to Kellogg for having the courage to appoint someone like me. Many people tell me that appointing someone with color would not have happened in any other school," he says.

The Kellogg business school includes among its alumni: Besty Holden, CEO of the Kraft Group; Harry Kramer of Baxter Pharmaceuticals; Don Nelson of US Cellular; and Chris Galvin of Motorola.

In the Philippines, the alumni include Gloria Tan Clunco, former head of SGV and Co.; Evelyn Sungson of Asian Hospital; Cesar Purisima, current head of SGV, and Lorenzo Tan of the United Coconut Planters Bank.

As the new dean, he says he would like to inject some of the Asian values to the American business system.

"I believe that Western businesses have a lot to learn about how Asians run their businesses. It is a wonderful area for research especially on how decisions are made because it is very different," he says.

The family-owned businesses in Asia, for instance, base their decisions more on intuition rather than fact. Multinational firms, on the other hand, are less budget-conscious than the family corporations because technically they are not spending their money.

Jain says he is conscious of the challenges he faces as he steers Kellogg in these trying times, but he is confident that he will make good, and he credits the Asian in him.

DEAN Jain always sets aside time to meet with students.

Use of voucher in education and its impact on the poor

IN MANY of the gatherings where I speak, I usually ask the question: How many of you pay taxes? In reply, I get almost everyone raising his hand. Then I ask, "How many of you who pay your taxes will deliberately send your children to a public school if you can afford to send them to a private school?" (We are, of course talking about the normal public schools, and not about elite public high schools such as the UP Prep High School, the Philippine Science High School, Manila Science High School, and others.)

I have never gotten anyone raising his hand. I find this somewhat disturbing. And I ask further, don't you think there is something wrong here? First, the public school system is supposed to be free. And second, your taxes should have paid already for the basic education your children should get as provided by law.

Why is it that none of you takes advantage of this free basic education that the government provides through the public school system? Do you realize that you have paid your taxes twice?

Of course, with the current economic situation and the depletion of many families' income, many have been forced to send their children to the public schools. Still, many parents continue to hesitate to take advantage of the free basic education the government provides through the public school system.

Why is this so?

It looks like many parents believe that the quality of education acquired from the public school system is inferior to the quality of education provided by the private schools. There are many theories on why this is so.

Disconnect?

My own personal view is that there is a fundamental "disconnect" between the service provider (the public schools) and the service recipients (the parents) in our present system. And why is there a fundamental "disconnect"? I believe that in the existing system, the service provider is not beholden to the customer.

The customer does not have a say as to whether the provider remains in business or not. The server does not care whether or not he is able to provide the level of quality required by his customer. There is no compelling reason for him to improve and compete. He is assured that those who cannot afford private education will just flock to him.

Therefore, the server can thumb his nose at the market since he cannot be made to fade away or become extinct.

The public school system can never get the parents who can afford to pay for the basic education of their children to patronize its service. The poor who have to patronize the service must feel that they don't have any power because they don't have any choice.

They are doomed to make do with a system wanting in quality. The system that we now have, therefore, is fundamentally flawed because of this disconnection.

How then do you fix something like this? You have to reconnect the parties. Something that is disjointed must be rejoined. Something that causes the system to malfunction must be corrected or replaced.

You, therefore, should give the service consumer a mode by which he can have a direct say if the system should function and continue. You should give the parents the means by which they can have the ability to choose the schools that will offer the basic education their children get.

The present manner in which the government fulfills its constitutional mandate to provide free basic education ties the parents up to a system that in essence cannot provide the quality of education they would want for their children. Neither can it prepare the majority of our kids for a highly competitive global environment now and in the future.

This is the fundamental basis of the radical proposal that we now offer. And this is for government to fulfill its constitutional mandate of providing each and every Filipino child access to free basic education through the voucher-funded education system. There would be objections. Almost any proposed change attracts objections. But what does this radical proposal constitute?

Change in mindset

Well, it requires a change in mindset in the way the government tries to fulfill its constitutional mandate. It ought not to be by providing the service itself. At present, the service providers (the government school functionaries) need not pay attention to the likes or dislikes as well as to the problems and criticisms of its customers, and it is under no compulsion to alter or improve the system within which it operates.

Over time, there would exist a widening gap between what the provider of the service offers and what its recipient really needs or desires. This has already happened.

How do you then turn things around? First it would require the government to redefine its constitutional mandate. The government can decide to pay for the service rather than provide the service itself. This can be done by giving the parents the means to pay for alternative educational services, leaving the existing system to shrink to a manageable level and accrediting those who can offer better quality services to the market.

The government must distribute this means to all parents with school-age children and allow them to choose the school, which they believe can provide their children the quality of education they should get.

This is the basic philosophy of the proposal and why it is grounded on a fundamentally sound theoretical framework. You have to connect the service provider to the service consumer. You have to treat the consumer as someone you sell to in order to ensure that the provider puts in effort, dedication and hard work to market his goods.

The voucher-funded education is a well-tried system. It is a system where the government provides compensation to families to enable their children to enter the private or public school of their choice. The government in essence transfers its powers to determine which schools to subsidize to the parents and the students.

Voucher system

Many developed and developing countries practice the system. Developed countries such as Canada, Sweden, the Netherlands, United Kingdom and Japan employ some variants of the voucher system. South and Central American countries such as Chile, Colombia, Puerto Rico and Guatemala also practice the system.

The State of Wisconsin started the system in the US. Developing countries like Bangladesh, Belize and Lesotho also have their own voucher systems in providing basic education to select groups of their citizens.

Each country has its own version of the voucher system, specific rationale and objectives, range of recipients in terms of economic class, sources of funding, regulatory practices, measures of achievements as well as problems.

A Philippine version can be designed to suit the requirements of Filipino parents, with the major objective, perhaps, of improving the access of the poor to quality education.

If we accept that the fundamentals of the voucher system are right, that the theoretical framework is sound, then we can figure out together how to translate this fundamentally sound principle into a better system that will significantly improve the current state of basic education in our country. Nobody says that we can do it overnight. However, the change in mindset has to happen now.

All change happens first in people's imagination. His paradigm and patterns of thought must change before anything outside of him changes. This is why we are trying to convince you that there are fundamental flaws in the way the present system works.

We have to change and change radically, and we have to be convinced about it. For unless we are convinced, we are not going to move. We are going to dig in and defend the entrenched present. We are not going to take the risk unless we fully believe and understand the reasons for the change.

We can be lulled by the fact that this is the way the Americans taught us for over 50 years. However, shouldn't we worry about the results?

The results, of course, are scary. As an example, in the Third International Math and Science Study (TIMSS) conducted in 1996, our country ranked 39th in Math and 40th in Science out of 41 countries. A repeat study three years later showed basically the same results with the Philippines ranking 36th out of 38 countries, lagging behind neighboring countries—Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia.

Yet ironically, the country is cited as having the highest literacy and enrollment rates in Southeast Asia. We produce more college graduates than Singapore, Sweden and Switzerland combined. These statistics, however, do not reveal the level of proficiency and know-how our graduates have acquired.

My experience tells me that large numbers of our graduates do not have the ability to communicate well, in writing or orally, in either Tagalog or English. Many cannot construct grammatically correct sentences let alone paragraphs.

They have little appreciation of the world around them. They cannot communicate their thoughts. This is because, fundamentally, the public school system did not give them the appropriate foundation of knowledge and skills essential in preparing them for life.

IT center?

Ironically, too, our country claims to be the center of information technology in the region. We tell the world that our competitive advantage is a population with a large pool of good, trainable knowledge-worker material.

With the kind of basic education a large number of our students get, how can we be assured that they are indeed prepared for this competitive environment? How can we claim with confidence that we have the right human resources to meet the requirements of the global economy?

The government must accept that we have to change. We have to connect the service provider to the customer. We have to give the customer the ability to tell the provider that "your service stinks" as well as the flexibility and means to acquire the service somewhere else. We must not insist on keeping a failed system at the expense of the future generation that will come after us.

Will the voucher system help the poor? Through the voucher system, the poor will be given the opportunity to get educated better and to get the appropriate skills. They will also get themselves empowered, giving them the flexibility to choose the quality of education they will give to their children.

There are poverty studies that say that every year a poor guy in our public school you are giving him an opportunity to become poorer. This conclusion was reached because given the quality of education he gets from the public schools, the poor are then condemned to perpetual "poorness."

But if you give him a chance to choose, then you give him the ability to play in a leveled field, because the poor will then have the ability to access a better basic education from the private schools and improve himself. The government must then provide them a voucher value that will be sufficient to cover for their entire school needs.

Looking for options

Indeed, there are a host of possibilities. There are many policy schemes, options and processes that can be studied and considered. But most importantly, it is essential that we connect the service provider to the service receiver.

EVALLE: In successfully managing companies today, managers mustn't discard completely the old values, principles and practices of management in the past which have brought us where we are now.

'For an organization to move it must hire the right people'

EVEN most modern business organization can benefit substantially from the adoption of tried and tested management practices.

"Trees that have grown tall and sturdy aren't cut down, they're pruned. In like manner, in successfully managing companies today, managers mustn't discard completely the old values, principles, and practices of management giants in the past which have brought us where we are now. These giants—the Fords, the Chryslers, the Citicorps and, in the Philippines, the San Miguel Corp., the Unilabs. The Ayala's for instance wouldn't be where they are now if not for the strong, highly principled and ethical practices of these companies' past managers."

Words of wisdom from an old, wizened management specialist? Specialist, perhaps, but certainly not old and wizened. Those are words by which Roy Kangbuk Evalle, vice president of Nextel Communication Philippines Inc.'s Human Resources Development and Administrative Group, lives and performs his work.

Evalle, 49, finished business administration from the De La Salle University. He had a short stint with US Industries, the company that originally imported Caterpillar heavy equipment into the country, moving on to 3M Philippines where he was hired as salary administrator.

He quickly rose up the corporate ladder and in 1979—by then, the marketing services manager—the first of a series of corporate headhunters in the region knocked on his door and courted him out of 3M to become personnel resources manager of another multinational outfit, NCR Corp. (Philippines).

He initially took care of planning, organizing and leading of the labor relations, compensation and benefits, and recruitment and sales departments of the company.

Evalle spent the next two years traveling extensively through the US and Canada visiting and observing operations of NCR branches there as well as in the Far East and the Asean region. His stint at NCR headquarters was part of the company's executive training and success on development program by which executives showing exemplary performance were "loaned" from various parts of the region and assigned regional work in the US.

In Evalle's case, he was exposed to hands-on inter-regional human resources functions with emphasis on compensation and benefits, executive recruitment, industrial training and management development training.

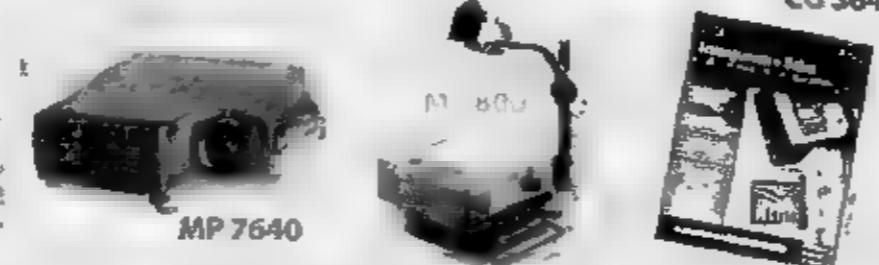

Subsequently, Evalle was preyed upon by headhunters, causing him to move on to other companies like Burroughs Ltd. (Philippines) where he was human resources manager in 1983; Data General (Philippines) in 1985 where he rose to regional compensation and benefits manager of the company's international manufacturing operations (regional) based in Singapore in 1987; The Dharmala group in Jakarta, Indonesia, of which he was deputy general manager in 1989; then technical advisor with the rank of human resources general manager for Bank Dharmala in 1990.

Despite slump, insurance is up

BY REYNALDO A. DE DIOS

THE PHILIPPINE insurance market performed creditably well in 1999 despite the continuing economic downturn attributable to the Asian economic crisis, which started in mid-1997.

On an overall basis, the assets of the market rose by 16.28 percent from P157.5457 billion in 1998 to 183.1933 billion in 1999. Liabilities on the other hand increased lower at 14.46 percent from P96.9611 billion in 1998 to P110.9394 billion in 1999 such that the market's net worth improved to P72.2559 billion in 1999 from P60.5846 billion in 1998, a gain of 19.09 percent.

In claims experience, there was a slight upward trend as total life payments and non-life losses incurred increased from P13.5407 billion in 1998 to P13.745 billion in 1999, an increase of only 1.51 percent.

Comparatively, the life insurance sector fared better than the non-life sector in 1999. Its assets grew by 19.05 percent, liabilities by 18.67 percent whilst net worth improved by 19.34 percent.

In operations, the life sector produced a premium income of P22.4030 billion in 1999, which reflected a growth rate of 15.73 percent over that of the P19.3586 billion in 1998. On the other hand, benefit payments increased by only 12.26 percent from P7.5506 billion in 1998 to P8.4767 billion in the following year. The number of policies in force as of Dec. 31, 1999 stood at 3,630,084, a growth of 5.74 percent over the 3,432,978 policies issued in the previous year. Significantly, the number of insurance certificates under group policies escalated from 9,032,978 in 1998 to 12,002,931 in 1999 or an appreciable increase of 32.88 percent.

The non-life sector, which includes the four professional reinsurance companies experienced modest gains in its performance. Its assets increased by 10.49 percent, liabilities by 5.42 percent resulting in an improved net worth gain of 16.61 percent.

Total gross premiums written by this sector amounted to P18.3447 billion in 1999, which is slightly lower by 1.86 percent in comparison with the P18.6928 written the year before. Premiums earned (after reinsurance and reserve requirements) reduced minimally by 4.54 percent from P11.8774 billion in 1998 to P11.3379 billion in 1999. The reasons for this development are the intense competition, sharp rate reductions supported by global reinsurance markets because of over-capacity, lesser construction and business activity as well as the reduction in motor vehicle sales. Fortunately, losses incurred also came down from P5.9901 billion in 1998 to P5.2685 in 1999, resulting in an overall non-life sector loss ratio of 46.47 percent compared with 50.43 percent in 1998. ## TV network boosts backroom operations

IN TIME for its 51st year in the broadcast industry, entertainment, news and information giant GMA Network Inc. recently signed a partnership that would fully computerize its back-office systems.

GMA-7 has partnered with e-business software provider Oracle Systems Philippines Inc. along with Arthur Andersen (Andersen), Progressive Software Inc. (Prosoft) and Datastream, for the implementation of its enterprise resource planning (ERP) software.

"In our battle for market leadership in the broadcast industry, we have to forge alliances with the best in the business. I am confident that with these partners on our side, it will be easier for GMA Network to become the No. 1 broadcaster and content provider in the Philippines in the soonest possible time," said lawyer Felipe L. Gozon, GMA president and CEO.

The completely Internet-enabled Oracle ERP solution, called Oracle Applications Release 11i, will cover financials, purchasing, human resources and payroll systems, and will provide intelligence tools to manage corporate business processes. The system is expected to be up and running within the next nine months.

"Together with our partners, we have a lot of things in common with GMA. We are one of the leaders of the Internet. We help manage information that help our clients collect, store and disseminate information over various channels. The directions GMA is taking help provide content through non-traditional means. A good example of this is their partnership with INQUIRER in a project called INQ7. This is in parallel with what we do with the Internet," cited Bernard Y. Yu, Oracle managing director.

The automation of GMA-7's business-critical operations is expected to reduce costs and improve efficiencies. Through the Oracle Business Intelligence software, information can be delivered to C-level executives in the shortest possible time thus enabling them to make critical business decisions quickly.

As the business consulting partner, Andersen will provide its management consulting expertise for the project. Prosoft will provide the technical expertise and fulfill the license requirements for Oracle, as well as the license and implementation services for Datastream. The MP2 solution of Datastream will address the asset maintenance concerns of GMA.

"We, in Andersen, are very pleased and excited to work with GMA, Oracle and Prosoft in this very significant endeavor," said Medel T. Nera, Andersen partner and head of business consulting division. "We have a topnotch team. I am sure we'll make this project a success."

Mike S. Mapa, president of Prosoft reiterated, "We, at Prosoft, are confident that together with Oracle and Andersen we will help GMA in becoming No. 1 in news and entertainment, and content provision in the broadcasting industry."

Bank links credit with remittance

EQUITABLE-PCIBank's two decades-long hinge in the remittance service is poised to be a potential clog of financing assistance to thousands of overseas Filipino workers (OFWs) seeking future livelihood and investment opportunities back home.

"As we have been known for our fast, dependable and safe remittance service, apparently, tayos na kami doon and given na lahat tyan. Express Padala is not just a remittance product linked to the regular payment delivery mechanism," affirmed Rene J. Buenaventura, Equitable-PCIBank executive vice president and retail banking group head.

According to him, the Express Padala remittance package is refashioning into a basket mix of potential financing services for OFWs. "Perhaps, after several years of stints abroad, these overseas workers could become future entrepreneurs with the various business options that Equitable-PCIBank is ready to assist them with," added Buenaventura.

As it continues its leadership role in the remittance market, Express Padala's remittance volume has already surged to a 15-percent market share. This benchmark remittance volume is mainly due to its major presence and leading edge in services to millions of OFWs working in the Middle East and Europe particularly in Saudi Arabia, Italy, Germany and in many parts of Asia.

However, while other major rivals are still preoccupied with the traditional cash dispensing payment schemes, Equitable-PCIBank is now readying itself to offer a bevy of credit assistance and loan products that could be intimately linked to remittances.

"We are modifying other well-known loan products like Own-A-Home to make them viable financing programs of Express Padala, eventually to help the entrepreneurial sector of Filipino workers augment their future livelihood and investment plans when they return from their overseas assignments," explained Buenaventura.

Banking with these overseas workers through Equitable-PCIBank's Express Padala is destined to solve common woes over OFWs' doable use of their savings into viable livelihood activities.

Meanwhile, Equitable-PCIBank pursues its thrust to provide convenience to OFWs and their families. Equitable-PCIBank FASTeller's expanding network allows remittance recipients to withdraw through 436 ATMs all over the Philippines.

Different configurations can be designed and constructed to respond to our unique culture and circumstances. These could be part of the refinements of our version of the voucher system. The voucher-funded education systems of other countries, such as Chile and Colombia, can be studied well and we can draw some lessons as well as avoid the problems, inequities and failures that these systems experienced.

What is most important is that we do change our mindset now. We have to accept that the existing system has failed. All the numerous studies that have been previously conducted that recommend tinkering with the system cannot and will never improve the results since the system itself is fundamentally flawed. We must believe that we need to change now, and that we should all act together, now.

Bank creates care unit for non-performing loans

AMONG the major casualties of the 1997 Asian financial crisis were banks all across the region that found themselves having to contend with loan portfolios that were suddenly far from desirable.

Before the economic contagion was alleviated, it wreaked havoc on the operations of numerous business entities, most of which used to be clients of good standing of their respective creditor banks just before the market turned bad. Unable to earn the money they needed to settle their obligations, the companies eventually left their banks with swollen non-performing loan (NPL) figures.

To ensure survival, banks had to make a tough decision. Some had no choice but to cut-off ties with former clients. Others focused their efforts in helping their customers weather the storm. Through well-crafted restructuring strategies, these banks stood by their clients and even managed to realize some concrete gains. Among these banking institutions is the financial services group UCPB.

"We value the relationships that we have with our customers. Whenever things turn bad, whether it be then, now or in the future, we always make it a point to study and see how we can restructure or rehabilitate our clients' loan obligations, allowing them to eventually bounce back into shape," said UCPB vice president and head of asset management, Jaime W. Jacinto.

To respond to its customers' need for debt settlement assistance, the UCPB management put up its Institutional Recovery Management Division (IRMD) in 1999 to assist clients in restructuring their loans and, at the same time, draft and implement strategies that will make the non-earning assets earn.

UCPB became one of the first institutions in the country to put together an arm that focuses on developing and implementing better alternatives on some of its acquired properties. The properties managed by the group are those that the bank believes to have high potential, but cannot be disposed of under prevailing conditions without severe discounts.

"IRMD is like a hospital's ICU or intensive care unit. It's where we try to restore really sick accounts back to good health. To do this, we try to make these ICU patients, in this case our clients, cooperate with us by following a set of recovery strategies for invariably come with certain sacrifices," said Jacinto.

Unfortunately, the business environment's volatile character in recent years has been a major stumbling block that prevented the bank from entering restructuring arrangements. In these situations where the bank and its client cannot restructure under mutually beneficial terms, the bank has to resort to other remedies.

One such remedy is for the bank to allow the clients to reduce their loans by finding a mutually beneficial solution that can address, as best I can, this predicament," Jacinto explained.

Experience has shown that payment through services allows a more immediate offsetting of the customer's loan obligations. A payment through property is more complicated as it transfers the risk of managing the property to the acquirer, which is the bank.

Among the recent acquisitions of the UCPB-IRMD are a five-star beach recreation project South of Manila, a couple of idle but prime vacant lots, which were converted to a paid parking facility and a passenger terminal with commercial operations respectively, and a hotel and mall complex in Manila. In the case of the hotel, the bank replaced its operator and re-positioned it to cater to the higher paying clientele.

On the other hand, to improve the mall's patronage, the bank re-engineered its look, tenant mix, etc. Jacinto declared these approaches were undertaken to enhance the value of the acquired assets and/or to turn the idle assets into earning assets. These creative ventures were done to allow the bank to buy time until the market recovers and the time's right to sell the assets at the right price.

"IRMD is composed of people with various areas of expertise. We're not hard-line bankers. We have a pool of architects, a mall expert, some retail specialists to package these properties so that we have an easier time selling them. We have two choices. One is to sell the property on an as-is, where-is basis. On the other hand, we can also offer them an ongoing business concern using the properties. The latter, we think, is more attractive," he said.

It is because of these initiatives undertaken by bank management, through the IRMD that UCPB is able to help its clients as best as possible and at the same time take a proactive approach in dealing with its acquired assets. UCPB management's decision to put in place the IRMD proved to be a step towards the right direction, after all.

"We now get calls from those whose loans we restructured and/or settled in the past, thanking us for our assistance. It is a good feeling being able to help the very clients who support our bank," Jacinto ended.

Chairman, the shareholders are revolting!

LONDON—“It is now your chance to ask questions. Can I ask you to be as brief as possible please?” BT chairman Sir Christopher Bland asked the sea of disgruntled shareholders crammed into the hall.

It is every executive’s worst nightmare—the annual shareholders meeting—that once-a-year chance for small investors to have their say and for the board to grin and bear it.

And with the share prices of most British companies in the doldrums, this year’s gatherings are proving a test of endurance for even the most silver-tongued bosses.

The management of telecoms companies such as BT, Marconi and Cable and Wireless have all been berated in recent days by small investors angry that the fat cats continue to cream off huge pay packages while their own investments have slumped.

“The share was at less than a pound this morning,” lamented one elderly Marconi shareholder, no doubt recalling that the same share was worth 12.50 pounds less than a year ago.

The board talks of the future in rather glowing terms. But as (John Maynard) Keynes said, in the long term we’re all dead.”

At BT’s gathering last week, 1,300 shareholders—more than twice the usual number—filled the National Ice Center in Nottingham, giving Bland and the rest of the BT board a frosty reception.

Even for an old hand like Bland—chairman of the BBC with a string of city boardroom jobs to his name—the two-and-a-half-hour ordeal was a test of patience.

The first few grumbles such as spelling mistakes in signs on Welsh-language phone boxes, or the cost of a phone call to New Zealand, were dealt with swiftly and calmly with a concerned look, a smile and a promise to “look into your particular case and get back to you.”

But soon the heckling stepped up a gear.

“This board is too old, too inbred and too overpaid to deal with the fast developing technologies,” said David Maplin from London, to warm applause.

Bland quipped back. “I’m certainly too old to be here, but here I am. You certainly can’t accuse me of being too inbred.”

The crowd laughed. Bland smiled and quickly moved on to the next question.

But as the meeting wore on the shareholders became more vocal, the exchange of views franker, and the smiles on the platforms decidedly more forced.

“My lawyer is better than your lawyer,” fumed Stewart Lawson, when cautioned by Bland about the tone of his suggestions that the CV of one of the directors might be erroneous.

Citibank in Manila, where he was made vice president/president/country compensation officer until 1997 when he returned to Indonesia upon accepting the vice-presidency of the human resources division of Bank Pura Surya Perkasa.

The 1998 riots in Indonesia saw an exodus of expatriates, including Evalle, leaving the country. Back in Manila, there was a short stint with the Alsos Group for Evalle, before he was swooped up again by a major executive search company based in Hong Kong for his present position in Nextel.

Going through a combination of “often painful but always rewarding” and challenging regional posting in the past 28 years through a mix of Asian Pacific and North American business cultures, Evalle does not strike you at all as the kind of person who had been steeped in the ultra-competitive world of global corporate business all of his professional life.

Unassuming

There is a quiet, unassuming air about him and while his relaxed way of speaking gives away his gentle background, the aggressiveness one might associate with someone who’s risen up the corporate ladder as fast as he did is not at all evident.

But this guy is no lightweight. Recognized and acknowledged as tops by other specialists in his field, Evalle’s easy manner is actually a sharpened asset. He puts people at ease fast—the better for them to open up to him and thus, the faster and easier for him to get a comprehensive grasp of their suitability for positions in the organizations he is and has been involved with.

“I’ve always liked people,” Evalle says, in explaining why he has chosen human resources for his profession. “I’m interested in what they’re doing and what else they can do; more importantly, I’m interested in what I can do to improve the things they’re doing now.”

“For an organization to move forward, it must hire the right people. And in considering anyone for a position, an important thing to ask is, how will this person be in five years, what will most likely be his contribution to the growth of the company he will work for?”

Global mindsets

He said he is “not exactly enamored with the Philippine economy” at present, and, believes that, perhaps, the country would be better off if it’s run by excellent Filipino managers who have experience working abroad. There are several reasons for this, one being such managers would most likely have a global mindset, or an understanding of how the world outside affects the Philippine economy. Next, Evalle says, you would probably have “a heterogeneous breed of managers, home-grown but trained abroad would have the best of both worlds.”

These managers would also be possessed with cross-cultural skills with ability to handle effectively people from diverse backgrounds as well as leaders who have a sense of their cultural roots.

Another very important characteristic that managers should have, according to Evalle, is the spirit of generosity. “It’s really magnanimity, or having the capacity for making decisions for the sake of solidarity in the organization—decisions that are good for everyone, not just for a group or for a particular person.”

Most, if not all of these characteristics, are present in the present cadre of managers that run Nextel and, for Evalle, this is the reason why his being with the company is “very enriching.”

He says he considers it a “signal privilege to be in a company that is run by an excellent cadre of managers, including Filipinos who are some of the most highly marketable in the region. They can work anywhere, whether in Asia or in the US and they are people who are products of the 1960s all the way to the 1990s.”

Evalle sees Nextel as most likely benefiting from both new and tried-and-tested management techniques.

At the same time, he says, Nextel is lucky to have a “core group of Western managers who bring with them to Nextel experience working in Asia.”

Evalle has been with Nextel Philippines since the beginning and has placed most of the local managers in their present positions. The company has over 400 employees.

Ultimately, Evalle says one of the most satisfying rewards in his profession is seeing people he recommended for employment rise up to top positions in their careers. “Some of the people I’ve hired are now company presidents; for instance, my six years in Indonesia saw three batches of management trainees who are now holding very senior positions in banks and/or big conglomerates.”

Gift of family

Whatever successes and traits Evalle has, he attributes this to a “wonderful gift of family.”

He reveres his parents, both of whom are still alive. His father, high-ranking retired Philippine Air Force officer Hortensio Guerrero Evalle of Zambales, was among those who started San Fernando Air Base in Lipa City, Batangas.

“He instilled in us the value of education, frugality and generosity; he is also a very good cook.”

Evalle’s mother, Jovita Knigbuk, from Lipa City, is still spritely in her 80s. From her, Evalle and his siblings developed a deep religiosity and an enduring appreciation for the arts.

Both parents also afforded the entire family with a life of travel, which, according to Evalle, was more of an education than leisure. “We were brought abroad, not to go to Disneyland but to go to concerts and to museums.”

Evalle has crisscrossed the globe extensively even as the artistic bent in him has led him to pursue, among his hobbies, painting, writing and composing songs. He has a collection of paintings with original works by a number of noted Filipino artists such as Baldemor, Raralio, Olaza, Belaza, Tlongco and various Spanish and American painters; his numerous collection of horse figurines include pieces by Daua, Swarovski, Tiffany and Lalique.

Most weekends, Evalle entertains friends and colleagues in his well-appointed home whose walls are adorned by his painting collection and the dining table a veritable feast of culinary offerings prepared and cooked by Evalle himself.

It is certainly not all work and no play for Evalle. Together with some close friends, he is what he calls “a very low-profile” major stockholder in the very successful club-cum-Mediterranean bar and restaurant PO NA NA, along Libis, Quezon City—certainly the hottest party spot in the metropolis.

And that’s not all. “We ch out for my next project,” says the indefatigable Evalle, “it’s going to be called TREES!”

What's ailing the economy now?

BY DENNIS M. ARROYO

INVESTOR confidence is held hostage by the Abu Sayyaf. The negative national mood is indeed dragging down the Philippine economy. But there is more. This article will explain the other factors that are holding back the recovery.

The following comprise the added baggage: the slowdown in the United States and Japan, the resulting slump in demand for our electronics exports, inadequate revenue collection and a weakened banking sector.

Sluggish economic growth. "There's no doubt that the growth is slowing down but it's also definite that the economy is not entering a recessionary period," Economic Planning Secretary Dante Canlas has said. "We are still seeing some growth but the strength may come either in the fourth quarter (of 2001) or in the first quarter of 2002."

Canlas predicts growth of the gross domestic product at 3.3 percent to 3.8 percent for the year. The International Monetary Fund offers a lower projection of 3 percent. The figure of the Asian Development Bank is even lower, at 2.6 percent.

Many a worker has felt the chill on growth. From January to May 2001, more than 500 small firms have shed 22,000 jobs. "These were mainly manufacturing companies with employment of less than 100, followed by retail trade, wholesale industries including the restaurant industry and service industries," said Labor Secretary Patricia Sto. Tomas.

Dampened export demand. Economies are slowing down in the United States, Japan and Europe. This is dulling their demand for our exports, particularly electronics.

Exports comprise a vital sector: they make up more than a one-third of national income. Electronics has been the nation's top export, accounting for 48.4 percent of the total during April.

Exports slid by 3 percent in February and 4 percent in March 2001. Then in April, the nation's export earnings dropped by 15.8 percent—the steepest year-on-year fall since 1975. This was caused by the dampening of demand for electronics exports to the United States and Japan. The US accounted for 29.6 percent of export earnings during the month, while Japan comprised 16.7 percent.

There were falls seen as well in other large markets for Philippine exports: the Netherlands and Taiwan.

Lower exports result in less dollar inflows to the Philippines. That weakens the peso, worsening the exchange rate. As such, the rate is playing around P53 to the dollar. A falling peso further expands the foreign debt burden, because the debt is denominated in foreign currency.

Finance Secretary Isidro Camacho told AFX-Asia that foreign banks expect the peso to recover to P49 to P52 in the next six to 12 months.

Don't rule out exports—the current exchange rate makes exporting lucrative. When the American economy is in a slump, the rational consumer would seek cheaper goods. These can be supplied by the Philippines. The weak peso means that Philippine exports come out cheaper in dollar terms. So look at exports from the view of the cost-cutting importer.

Huge budget deficit. Another major challenge is the budget deficit. Recall how events played out last year. Despite the political turmoil during the end game of the Estrada administration, real GDP growth managed to hobble on at 3.9 percent in 2000.

The glaring downside was that the fiscal deficit shot up to more than double the official target for the year. In 1999 the national fiscal deficit was P112 billion, equal to 3.7 percent of GNP. It swelled further to P136 billion in 2000, or 4.1 percent of GDP. Government had to borrow more from the public.

The official deficit target for 2001 is P145 billion.

At the heart of the problem is rampant tax evasion. The public should support the government in cleaning up the tax collection service.

The bigger the deficit, the more government must turn to borrowing. The state usually borrows from the public by selling Treasury bills. This would raise interest rates of the T-bills, pushing up general interest rates in the entire banking sector. Higher interest would depress investments further.

That is why the government is now shifting to borrowing from abroad. It is selling $500 million in global bonds.

"We have approved in principle their (government's) intent to borrow," Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas Governor Rafael Buenventura told reporters. "I am told it's very good and very encouraging because in the medium- and long-term, there's confidence in the Philippines."

Weakened banking sector. Another problem is the weakened state of Philippine banks, even as most banks have sufficient capital. The non-performing asset ratio rose to 25 percent by March. The aggregate capital adequacy ratio shd to below 16 percent in January.

These are the results of the political conflict that began in October 2000 and culminated in People Power II.

The Philippines is generally weak in formal savings mobilization. "The country has one of the lowest degrees of financial intermediation in Asia," says a report by the Asian Development Bank. Important sectors do not get enough credit.

Fortunately, the General Banking Law of 2000, which arose in response to the Asian crisis, would likely improve matters. The new law would sharpen competition by liberalizing the entry of foreign banks. They can now own up to 40 percent of voting stock. Under some conditions, a foreign bank can even own up to 100 percent of a local bank.

The Bangko Sentral steps on the brakes though: banks that are majority owned by local will hold 70 percent of the resources in the entire banking system.

Orderly transition at the CCP

THE TRANSITION at the Cultural Center of the Philippines is complete. The board led by chair Gloria Angara and president Armita Rufino paved last week the orderly turnover of power to the new board led by Baltazar Endriga and Nes Jardin. Now the arts and culture community can focus on cultural promotion and engendering, presuming, of course, no one botches the act at the other principal arts and culture agency, the National Commission on Culture and the Arts, which is experiencing tectonic power shifts of its own.

Although it came to office in a blaze of controversy, the Angara-Rufino board should take comfort in the fact that it left in a quiet, dignified manner, confident of its legacy. The board members tendered their resignations immediately after the EDSA II revolution last January. Angara later wrote Maracafang to ask for the reinstatement of Rufino, architect Lor Calma, pianist Ingrid Santamaria and musician Alfonso Bonipata, arguing they did praiseworthy work. But to no avail. If Vicky Gachitoren, head of the Presidential Management Staff, were to be believed, "the President wanted to form an entirely new board."

Of course, the new board is not exactly new. It is mainly composed of the old board before Angara and Rufino came in. "We are astonished that the Endngaled trustees are now appointed back to manage the Cultural Center," said Angara.

FORMER CCP chair Gloria Angara: Secure in her legacy.

Orderly . . .

Angara couldn't resist noting that the old board had returned to power through presidential sponsorship. In fact, she had clashed with the Endriga board in 1999 when, against her appointment by then President Joseph Estrada, she and her board had to undergo a process of corporate insertion into the old board because that was supposedly mandated by the CCP charter. When she and her board asserted their authority, the Endriga board took the issue to the courts. The Supreme Court still has to rule on the matter. In the meantime, Endriga and his board have accepted their appointments by the new Mulacafang occupant.

Reacting to the appointments, Angara said she "recognized and respected the constitutional obligation of the president to appoint her nominees to the CCP." She explained the CCP is a government-owned corporation and the Constitution mandates that "the President shall have control of all executive departments, bureaus and offices."

Majority of the pottery to be shown will be of high-fired stoneware clay and glazes made of Philippine materials. The exhibit will also feature the first results of the "Philippine Aragama Project," which was recently held at the Pettyjohn Workshop in Laguna.

A sinister one was the figure of a kneeling prisoner tied to a post with the rope running around his neck. The Chimu, a highly developed urban culture that lasted until its destruction by the Incas, mass-produced its ceramics, aiming for functionality rather than art. The principal characteristics of the Chimu pottery include a dark, glossy external surface; representations of animals, plants, humans, mythological beings; the presence of a small figure of a monkey or other animals at the base of the handle.

Though tending toward functional mass production, this typically black pottery was among the most beautiful in the exhibit. We marveled particularly at the extensive detailing, such as in a jug with a relief of birds, a small boat made of reeds, and that ubiquitous monkey holding on to the jug's neck. Or the bottle decorated with a woman surrounded by corn cobs.

Most surprising

In fact, we marveled at almost everything in that exhibit, and found connecting one of this pre-Inca civilization with several other ancient cultures. For instance, the double-bodied bottle with an anthropomorphic figure and decorations of waves and fish reminded us of a seashell on a Japanese scroll.

The container shaped as a dog nursing four puppies was almost a miniature version of that Roman sculpture of Romulus and Remus sucking a she-wolf. The bottle shaped as a person carrying an animal could be any other Indian hunter bearing a big cat, but then the man had a mysterious archaic smile, and that easily connected to early Greek sculpture.

The most surprising of the lot were the two bottles depicting an erotic scene—miniature figures of a man taking a woman from behind. It was so realistic that, if you looked closer, you could even see the man's genitalia and the woman's facial expression, you'd swear both were winching from pleasure or pain.

Sculptor-painter Leonardo Hidalgo holds homecoming show at Asia Art Gallery

SCULPTOR-PAINTER Leonardo M. Hidalgo, former department head and professor for 24 years of the UST College of Architecture and Fine Arts, has returned from Philadelphia recently to mount the first of his two solo exhibits slated this year.

The exhibit, "Seasons," runs Aug. 10-17 at the Asia Art Gallery, 6/L, Shangri La Plaza Mall. "Seasons" presents more than 20 works in watercolor and acrylic, portraying familiar landscapes and seascapes in clear and vibrant colors. Other works include still-lifes of flowers, scenes of folk dances as well as depictions of Hidalgo's only granddaughter, 3-year-old Isabella in playful mood.

Hidalgo is the man behind the acclaimed "Dominican Saints and Martyrs," the historic-religious sculptures in front of the Central Library building facing the Diputación Street gate of the University of Santo Tomas, Asia's oldest university. The sculptures depict what Dominicans and UST alumni call as "the glory of UST"—the Dominican martyrs who trained or taught at UST before dying for the faith in hostile Asian lands, including the first Filipino saint, Lorenzo Ruiz, a member of a Dominican Ma-nian confraternity. Hidalgo and his wife Alba left the country in 1992 when their only child, Odriane, only 14 at that time, earned a scholarship to the School of Pennsylvania Ballet in Philadelphia. While Odriane moved on to dance with the Philadelphia Russian Ballet Theater, her mother pursued her career as a social worker and psychotherapist.

"Nung nasa Amerika ako, miss na miss ko talaga ang Pilipinas. Mudala na natin bilahan ako sa mga group shows at doon ko natalabas 'yung mga trabaho ko tungkol sa Pilipinas. I paint country scenes, still-lifes, anything that would remind people that I am a Filipino and I come from the Philippines," Hidalgo beams. "I also paint scenes reminiscent of my student days with Leon Pacunayen, Florencio Concepcion and Angelito David in Italy. That was more than 40 years ago!"

On Aug. 10, Hidalgo's guests of honor are Italian Ambassador Umberto Colesanti, Mayor Mary Jane Campos Ortega of San Fernando, La Union and Dr. Alejandro R. Roces, known art patron and chair of Movie and Television Review and Classification Board.

Malang at Luz Gallery

HE may be over 70, but he is far from throwing away his brushes. He still spends a great part of his day discovering new ways of presenting subjects that are very dear to him. "Malang's Sketchbook" features some 50 small works in gouache, on view from Aug. 4-23, at the Luz Gallery (Locsin Building corner Makati and Ayala Avenues, Makati; 893-4376 or 815-6906).

"Malang's Sketchbook" hints at the artist's attempts to present his images anew, composing them tightly while generously playing around with colors. The collection presents a mix of works, some bathed in color, others in black and white. The mood is very light, the swooshing lines show the artist is having fun with his creations.

Malang loves and lives for the serious challenge of exploring different approaches. Art is a continuing process, he says, learning doesn't stop. Even when he's traveling, his main concerns revolve around finding new art materials and inspirations for future pieces.

"THREE WOMEN," gouache, 8 1/2" x 12"

Fragments of a mysterious civilization

BY CONSTANTINO C. TEJERO

EVEN before Pablo Neruda sang of "The Heights of Machu Picchu," the world had long suspected there once was such a civilization that existed in what came to be known as the New World. In fact, it was said to have flourished thousands of years ago, when some Europeans were still walking on all fours.

Says a museum brochure: "Before Columbus' arrival, great Indian civilizations thrived in Central and South America, with the richest and most powerful centered in what are now the modern nations of Peru, Mexico and Guatemala."

That's from the exhibition note of "Discovering the Mystery of Ancient Peru," an exhibit of pre-Inca artifacts presented by the Metropolitan Museum of Manila in cooperation with the Embassy of Peru.

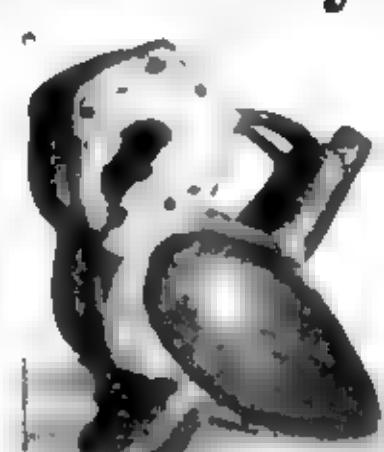

Held July 6-21 at the Tall Galerie, the exhibit featured 45 artifacts dated before the 16th century. The wares were arranged on black pedestals and encased in glass, and categorized according to the various indigenous cultures that flourished in Peru before the Inca civilization. Chavín (800 BC-200 BC), Nazca (250 BC-750 AD), Moche (3rd century BC-7th century AD), Chimu (1000-1470).

We find one crucial thing problematic, though. For instance, sources vary as to the dating of the Chavín culture. One says it flourished between 1600 BC and 800 BC, another says it's 800 BC-200 BC, and yet a third claims it's 1st century AD-6th century AD.

If we believe the first claim, why, that's more than a millennium before the Golden Age of Greece. And if we believe the third, that can hardly be, because this ancient culture, which flourished in a small valley on the eastern slope of the Andes, was supposed to be the earliest Peruvian civilization. So we'd rather take the second. As Aristotle said, the middle way is the best way.

Pictorial quality

AN ORNITHOLOGY-INSPIRED Moche bottle with bridged handle

NAZCA bottle with bridged handle and two spikes, with paintings of snakes for the outstanding craftsmanship of the pre-Inca artisans. This can be readily seen in the detailing and coloration of some of the pieces, as well as in their imaginative portrayal of creatures both mythical and real, and their naturalistic depiction of daily activities such as hunting, fishing, combat, religious ceremonies.

The principal motif of the Chavín style is the jaguar god, symbolizing supernatural strength and power. Objects are decorated with images of snakes, crocodiles, plants, or humans with animal attributes such as bird feet, reptilian eyes or feline fangs.

Among the Chavín pieces in the exhibit were a grotesque face of a deity with large eyes, a bottle sculpted like a shell and etched with various designs, and another bottle sculpted like a howling monkey. The bottles referred here were made of stone or ceramic, and their fine finish belied their ancient provenance.

The Nazca style is even finer and more intricate in detailing. The pottery is often polychrome with a brilliant finish; the vessels normally globular and double-necked with bridged handles, the ceramics overly decorated and painted with as much as 11 different colors (but usually white, red, black, orange, gray and purple).

Cultural life

The Moche, which used a sophisticated molding technique, manufactured whistling bottles with stumpy spouts and handles. The culture produced naturalistic sculptured pottery, usually portraits of humans, animals, plants, buildings, deities. This ceramic art—fine pottery vessels bearing portraits of all aspects of cultural life—has become "one of the most widely recognized forms of pre-Hispanic art in South America."

And it was easily the most amazing as well in the exhibit, as the pieces resembled the modern ceramic doll or figurine. There was a bottle shaped as a character playing drums, and another as a fat woman with a child.

The container shaped as a dog nursing four puppies was almost a miniature version of that Roman sculpture of Romulus and Remus sucking a she-wolf. The bottle shaped as a person carrying an animal could be any other Indian hunter bearing a big cat, but then the man had a mysterious archaic smile, and that easily connected to early Greek sculpture.

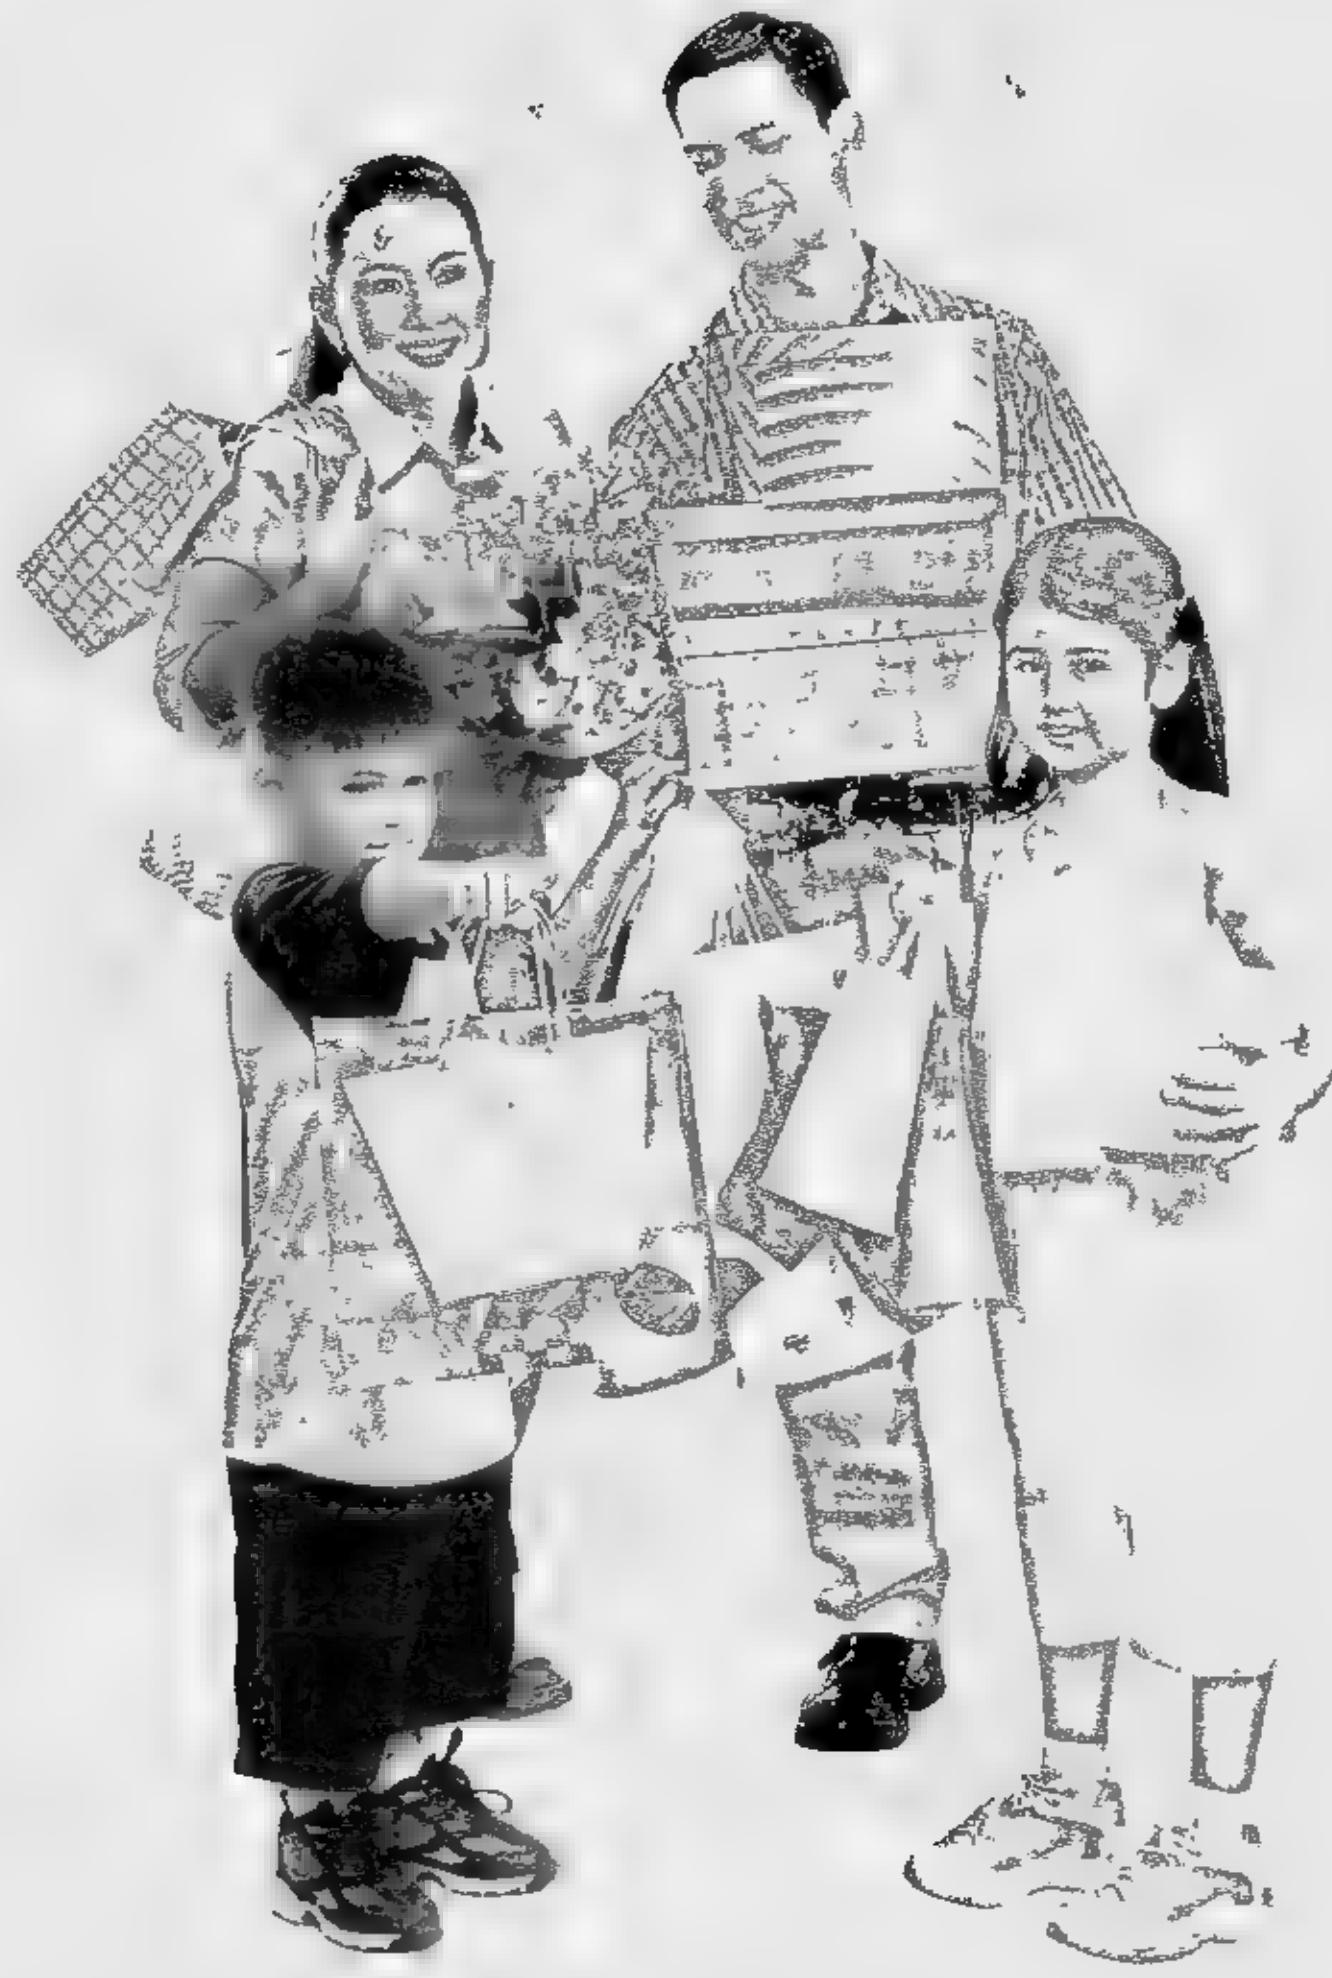

The most surprising of the lot were the two bottles depicting an erotic scene—miniature figures of a man taking a woman from behind. It was so realistic that, if you looked closer, you could even see the man's genitalia and the woman's facial expression, you'd swear both were winching from pleasure or pain.

Have we seen that before? Why, of course, on the facades of those ancient Hindu temples.

KLAUDIA Koronal and Ina Raymundo in "Tuhog"

Jeff Jeturian's 'Tuhog' is competition entry in Venice filmfest

AFTER MANUEL Conde's "Genghis Khan" in 1950, a Filipino film makes it again to the prestigious Venice Film Festival, the world's oldest international film festival.

"Tuhog," directed by Jeffrey Jeturian, written by Armando Lao and produced by Lily Y. Monteverde of Regal Films Inc. bested hundreds of entries around the world to and as one of the 20 finalists for the festival's Cinema of the Present Competition. For its international release, "Tuhog," which shows how cinema trivializes the real-life tragedy of a mother and her daughter who have been raped by the former's father, will carry the title "Larger than Life."

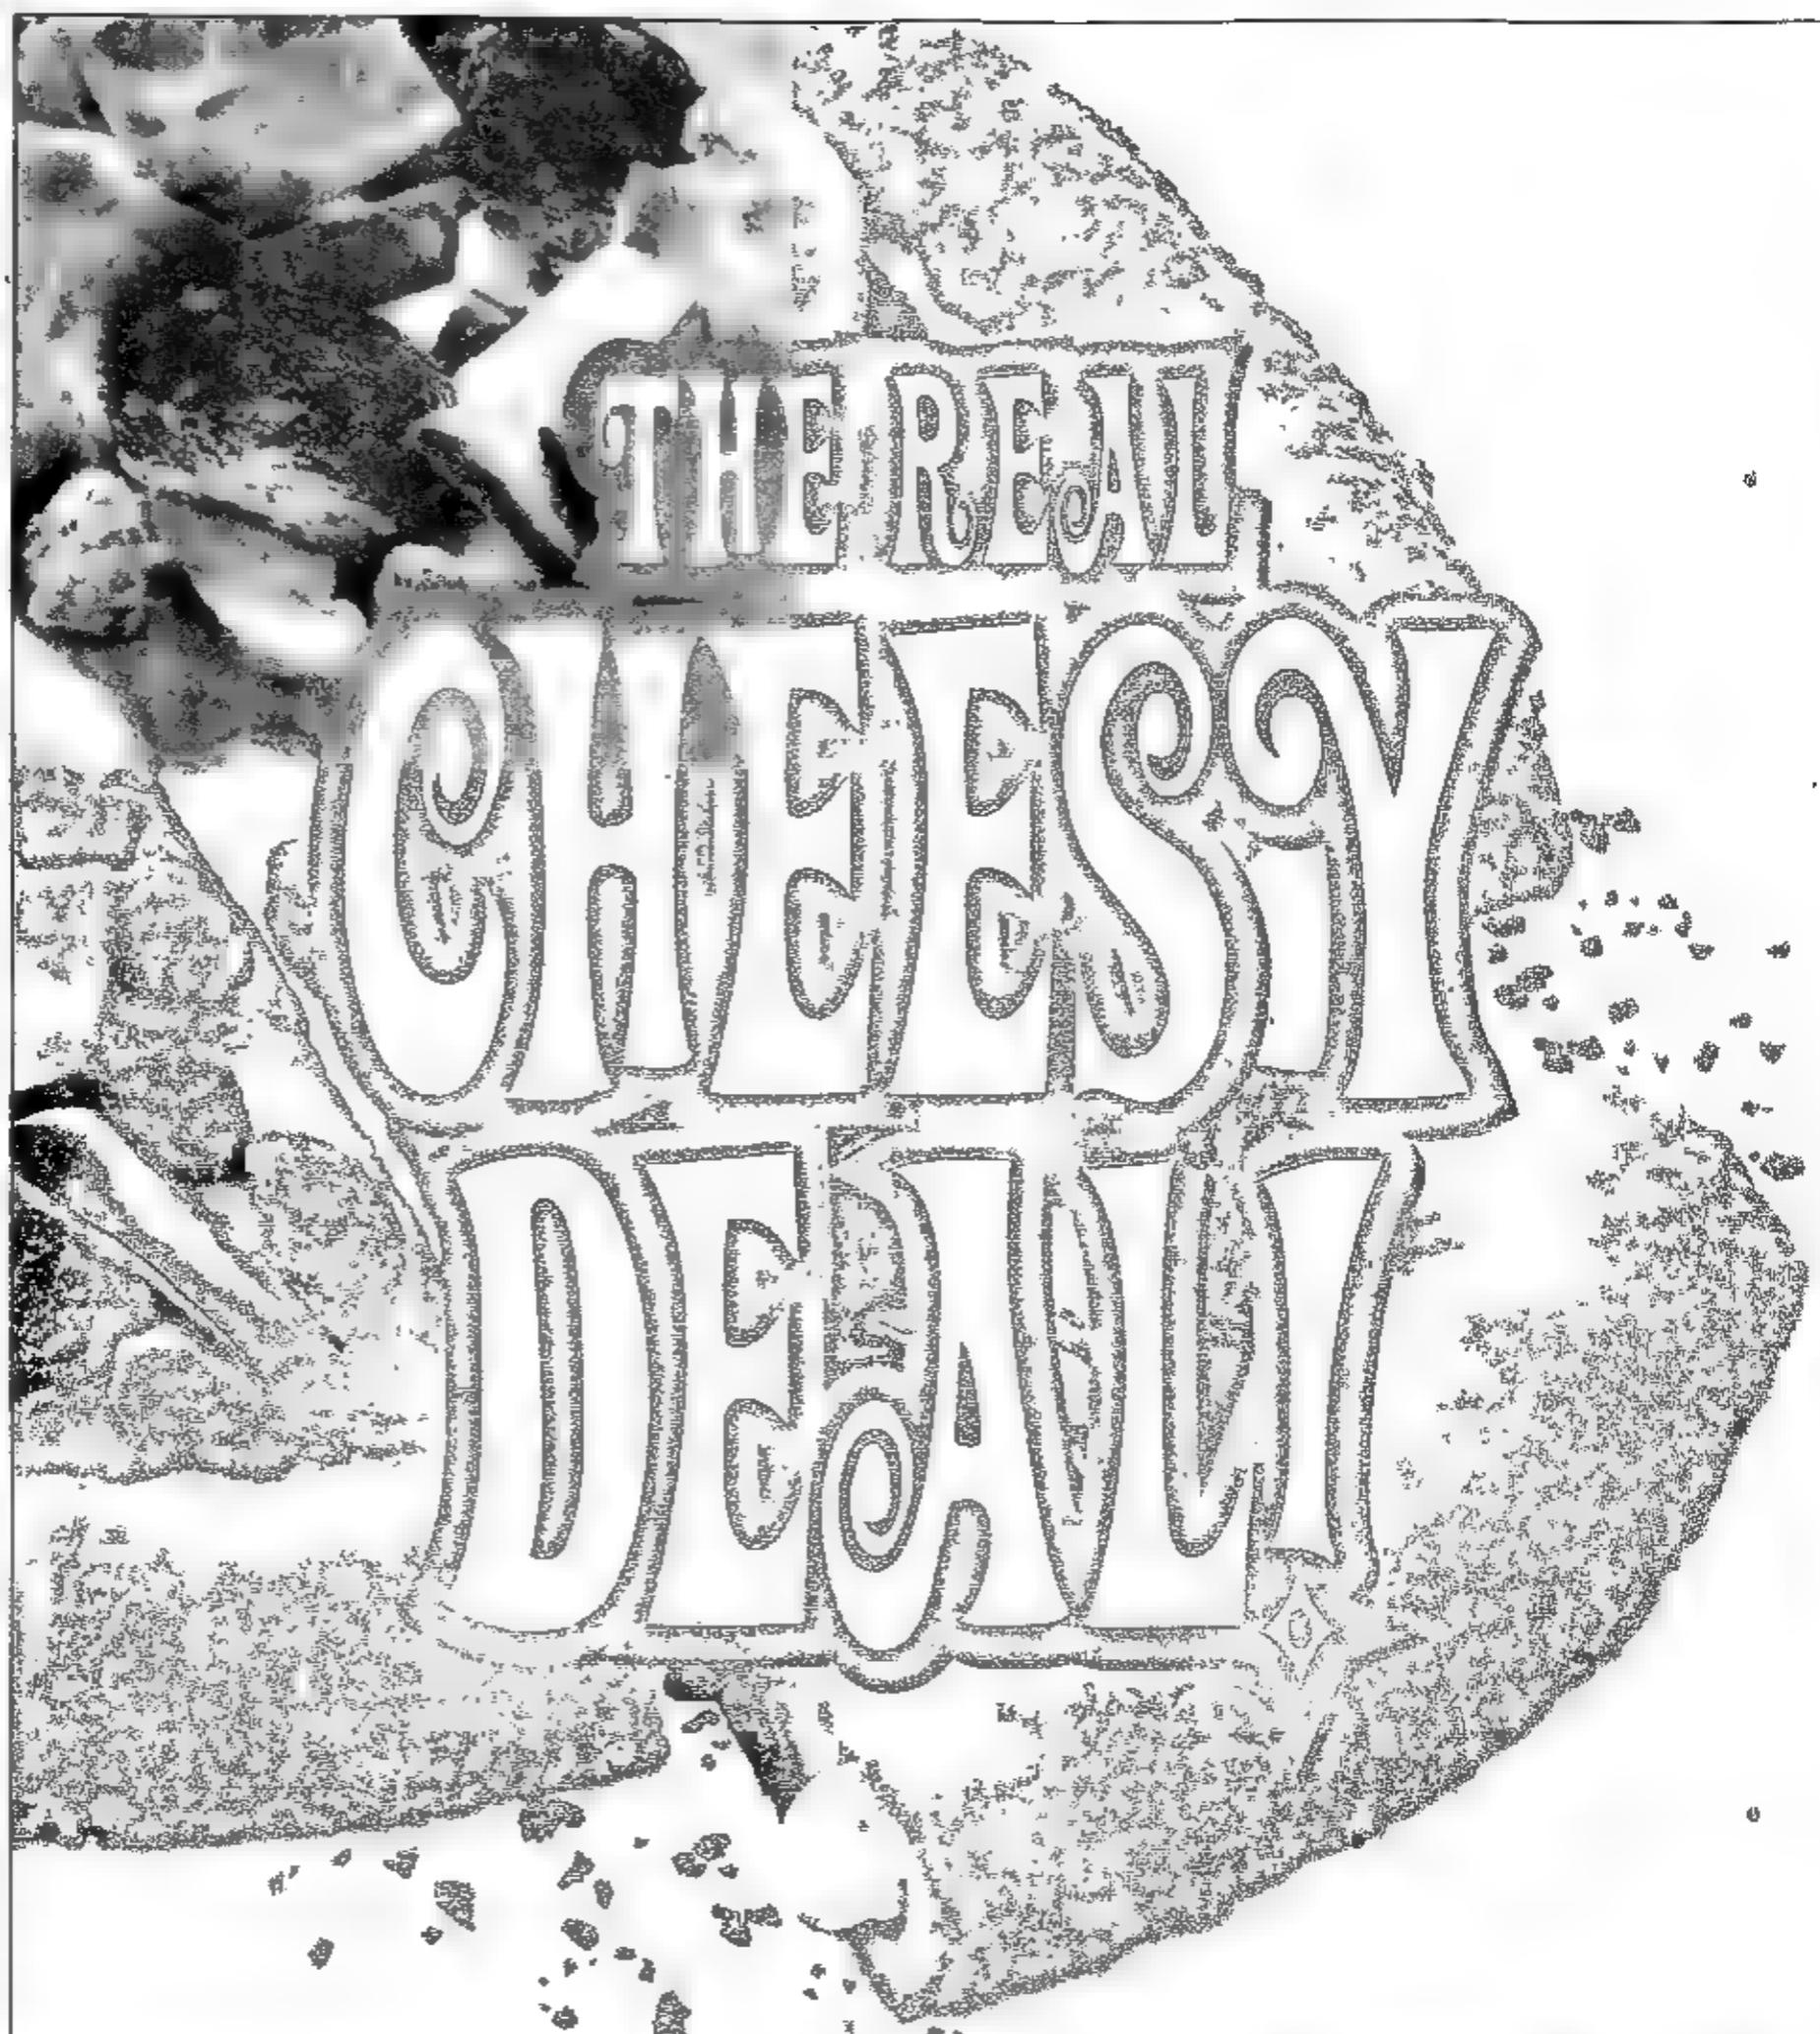

The Cinema of the Present is a competitive section for feature films that are representative of contemporary cinema in its experimental, cutting-edge or path-breaking trends and forms. The Jury will be made up of five or seven figures from the world of cinema, each representing a film magazine from a different country. The entries will be eligible for the Lion of the Year prize, worth $100,000, which will be divided equally between director and producer. The Jury will also award two special prizes.

Early this year, "Tuhog" garnered four awards, including Best Picture, in the Urian Awards given by the respected film critics group, the Mamatung Peukulang Pilipino.

When the film festival organizers announced the competition entries, Jeturian was taping episodes for his television shows "Big ang Sibol," "Bayang Impasibol" and "Pira-prasong Pangarap." According to the Armando Lao, who won the Urian Best Screenplay award, Jeturian "is very happy to and in the competitive section of the international film festival."

The Venice Film Festival, officially known as the 58th Mostra Internazionale D'arte Cinematografica, is organized by La Biennale di Venezia. The festival will be held on the Venice Lido from Aug. 29 to Sept. 8. An integral part of the Festival will be the screenings held in Venice itself and on the mainland, organized in collaboration with Venice City Council under the title Esterno Notte.

According to festival director Alberto Barbera, the festival aims "to encourage awareness of all the various aspects of cinema as art and entertainment, thus stimulating creative activity through a process of comparison and study."

Enhancing spirituality through dance

*The wise traveler walks alone,
For the path to the top of the mountain is narrow.
There is room only for two,
And the other is Truth.*

—Barbara Ramsay

BY CORA LLAMAS

THE POETRY of Australian poet Barbara Ramsay is almost like a siren beckoning the listener to be one with its music. Or enter and be part of the world. In this journey, though, the truth the journeyman confronts is not the author's message, but the reality that lies within his own soul.

Solitude, that one moment of just being oneself, with no deadlines or sales quotas to run after, or no jarring electronic distraction to disturb its serenity, is almost priceless in its rarity. Ramsay's short but stirring poem, "God: The Companion," gently reminds us to quiet down, enjoy the flowers, look for God or for a deeper spirituality, and just bask in it.

The upcoming multimedia dance-concert, "The Traveler," which uses Ramsay's poems as a springboard, hopes to send that same message across in an innovative fusion of modern dance, poetry recital, music, video and theater. In the same way that the Ramsay poems ask the reader to leave the trappings of normal life, "The Traveler" bends the conventions of the artistic disciplines to create something new. The traditional fourth wall of the performance arts is literally taken away, as the audience is beckoned to participate in the concert, and not just watch it.

For starters, the venue for the show is a corridor (not an auditorium), the spacious, stretched-out horizontal marble space that connects Towers 1 and 2 at the RCBC Plaza Galleria. Passersby walking on De la Costa Avenue and nearby Buendia can easily see the performance.

Flexible, free numbers

The performers, led by dance artist Marge Enriquez, will traverse this long impromptu stage, essaying in dance the poetry. Music is composed by no less than National Artist Lucesia Kasig, unencumbered by the platform and enclosed walls of the traditional stage, the dance numbers become more flexible and free.

Four large screens positioned strategically on different parts of the building click on cue, juxtaposing the various sequences with mesmerizing film images about life. According to video director Ed Lejano, the overall effect of the MTVs is a cross between the dazzling, unpredictable intensity of film maverick Quentin Tarantino and the undisturbed peace of Zen.

Strange mixture, admittedly. But isn't the journey to spirituality often like that?

This concert is a journey, and the nine dance sequences climax with the Traveler reaching her destination. And, making this production truly interactive, the generally unseated audiences, who follow the Traveler literally from stage to stage, phase to phase, ultimately complete their own individual journey with her.

"The essence of Barbara's poetry is all about the soul," says Enriquez, who also edits the Friday fashion and trends section of the Inquirer. "Her poetry is about a soul going through this journey in life. You have to understand certain things about yourself if you are to reach your destination.

"These days, dance has become so technical. So much attention is focused on the body, techniques and forms. One of the most influential ballet masters that country has ever had used to tell his students, 'I want to see the essence in your eyes, because the eyes are the windows of the soul.'

When a person dances (or performs) with soul, "you don't notice the skill at all. You only see the energy the person is exuding, coming to you all the way from the stage. All of us here are interested in spirituality. We want to help put soul back into the arts."

Collaboration

"We" refer to the team of artists collaborating with Enriquez on the project, a bunch of seasoned pros from several creative disciplines. Katsch Catoy, who had been involved with dance companies like Ballet Philippines, directs. Kasig's music will be rendered by the Philippine Women University's Music Ensemble. Complementing Lejano's videos in interpreting Ramsay's poetry is choreographer Gerald Mercado. The postmodern production design is conceptualized and executed by Antonio Salas Santos and Ruchi Cuna. Part of the attraction of the production design are the 11 new pieces crafted by sculptor Impy Pilapil. The costumes are by Joe Salazar and Marden Iglesias.

The dancers supporting Enriquez include Dwight Rodriguez, Orlando de Leon, Rency de los Santos and guest artist Ernest Mandap, a member of the Brumachon Lamarche Company in France. Together, they make the different dance sequences speak of themes such as silence, courage, tolerance, accommodation and crossing over into new life.

Aside from their spiritual inclinations, the vision to explore something new and break new ground unites these artists.

"We're inviting the yuppie to step back from his hectic work-work-work world," says Catoy. "'The Traveler' is a series of events flowing into one another. The disciplines also flow—from ballet to poetry to music. Space-wise, you also flow, starting from below stage to upstage, going up and going down again. It has to do with freedom of expression."

Costume designer Salazar enthuses about working with artists who are creative and flexible enough to stretch the conventional boundaries.

For example, Pilapil's elongated, steamed rattan sculpture pieces don't just lie around. They are laid down, carried, "translated into mobile performances that have to move with the rest of the events. The videos may be experimental, but they're not just entertainment. Each sequence in this show is complete in itself but still part of the big picture."

Complete and yet part of a greater whole. "The Traveler" is a mirror of its own message: "We have our own paths to follow, but we all reach the same destination."

Marge Enriquez, with RCBC Plaza, presents "The Traveler" at the RCBC Plaza Galleria Corridor (between Towers 1 and 2) on Aug. 9, 7:30 p.m.

Grieg and Tchaikovsky concertos get euphoric reception in Cagayan and Isabela

BY PABLO A. TARIMAN

WHILE the militants braced for the Sona and Manila's cultural scene turned its eye at the latest CCP and NCCA operettas, music lovers in Cagayan and Isabela looked forward to hearing their first Grieg and Tchaikovsky concertos.

The concertos were on the occasion of the visit of pianists Reynaldo Reyes and Ingrid Sala Santamaria in this part of Northern Luzon. The two artists themselves were excited; they had looked forward to seeing a new landscape and, with it, a new audience.

It was quite perfect timing that when we planned the Tuguegarao concert, there was a new concert hall within the campus of the St. Paul University in the heart of the city. It is called the Learning Resource Center, within it is the Mother Madeleine Hall, which is air-conditioned and has two dressing rooms with clean bathrooms. When I checked it a few days before the concert, I found it had good acoustics as well.

No one could recall the last time local audiences heard a full concerto, but from what I had gathered, it could be the time many years ago when Fr. Raulillo Aquino was soloist in a Rachmaninoff Second Concerto with Bishop Sergio Utleg on the second piano.

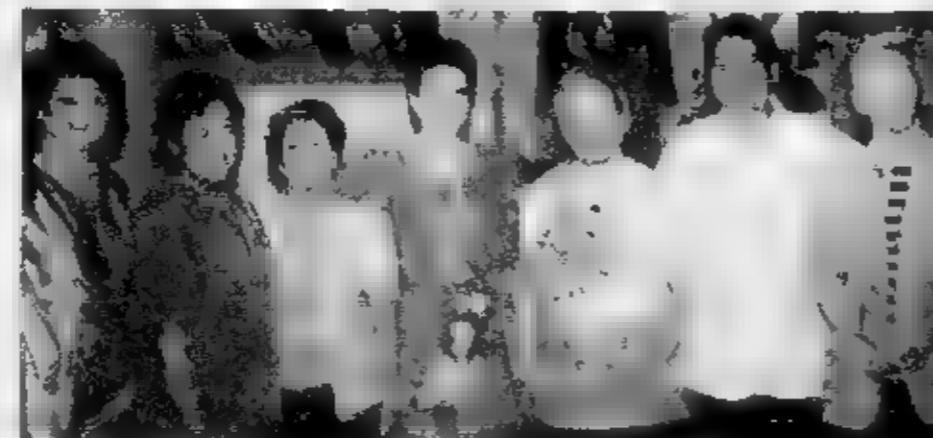

And so when I addressed my first Tuguegarao audience last July 21, I knew I was in for another concert of rediscovery—a new place, a new audience and, hopefully, a new generation of faithful followers of classical music.

We were lucky to have two baby grands (Santamaria on Piano 1 and Reyes on Piano 2, the first courtesy of Ms. Quimpo, and the second, an old reliable we found in the campus gym).

As it were, the good turnout of audiences, led by Archbishop Diocesano Talamayan of the Archdiocese of Tuguegarao, led to full and better appreciation of the Grieg and Tchaikovsky concertos. The open forum was participated in by no less than the good bishop (he saved the concert from cancellation with the intervention of Ms. Pilar Pobre Cusa, a native of the place and now based in Cebu City).

A nun said she was thrilled, lawyer Carmelo Lasam (he—with his daughters in tow)—was excited to discover the power of the piano in two full-length concertos) asked how long it takes to memorize two piano masterpieces. After informing the audience of the attempts to improve the cultural life in the city, Sr. Mary Angela Barrios, president of St. Paul University, wondered why when it comes to culture, we are always waylaid by lack of funds.

The intermission number of the St. Paul Chorale, under choral conductor Sr. Ma-

Theresa Asencio, was impressive and so full of possibilities and it led me to think that a full-length Handel's "Messiah" is possible in Tuguegarao in December.

But as the concert ended in a standing ovation for pianists Santamaria and Reyes, we looked forward to using culture as a tourism component and this we took up with Tourism regional director Bless Diwa, who sponsored the transportation of the touring party from Tuguegarao to Isabela and back and all the way to Manila (the PAL plane failed to land for our trip back to Manila). Tourists in this part of Northern Luzon could enjoy a good two- or three-day tourism package—two days in hotel of their choice, a visit to the Callao Caves on the second day, and in the evening, a concert at Mother Madeleine Hall or kayaking with sportsman Anton Carag.

A cleaner Ilagan town greeted us in Isabela as we arrived for the fifth concert at Hotel Roman's Ville, which hosted the First Cagayan Valley International Music Festival last year.

It was the first time Isabela music lovers saw two upright pianos sharing the Hotel Roman's Ville stage and the first time an open forum followed after the concert.

Newly elected Mayor Delfinio "Jojo" Albano III cited the role of culture in improving the quality of life of the people of Ilagan and said the municipality is ready to be involved in future cultural presentations.

To get the most from the two uprights, we opened the top covering and even the lower wooden partition (just above the piano pedal). I told the audience that Grieg and Tchaikovsky concertos were meant to be played on grand pianos but since we had none, the uprights (courtesy of Mr. and Ms. Ben Laccay and Mr. and Ms. Babes Esalva) would do.

After more than three earlier exposures of these concertos from the same soloist, one thought one would be less involved in this latest performance. Santamaria's tones were even fuller on an upright and Reyes' sound duplicated the power of an orchestra. And besides, this modest venue with good acoustics had a way of bringing out freshness and intensity of any performance.

The Grieg concerto left the audience in awe but the Tchaikovsky concerto rendered them breathless. This time, Mayor Albano and the two bishops—Monsignor Utleg and Archibishop Talamayan—led the standing ovation for Santamaria and Reyes.

Former Isabela vice governor and now board member Manuel Binas gushed after the concert: "This concert is fascinatingly and awesomely beautiful."

In the open forum that followed, laymen's observations on the concertos were given professional insight by Reyes. Some asked why classical music is associated with the rich and Reyes answered it was because piano lessons involved money and only the rich and the well-off can afford to buy the piano.

But even if the poor cannot afford to buy a good piano, a good violin and a first-class cello, from the concert reception given in Ilagan and Tuguegarao, we can conclude that appreciation of fine music is indeed not a monopoly of the rich. It is for everybody regardless of social status.

Our special thanks to Archbishop Talamayan and Fr. Bernie Corpus, St. Paul University in Tuguegarao, Mayor Albano, and Dr. and Ms. Victor Villaroman in Isabela for hosting these two outreach concerts. When you get free venue with complimentary reception to boot, these are heaven-sent for unfunded touring groups who share fine music in the countryside regardless of the

When you see an euphoric audience applaud a good performance, I am sure you get rewarded in other ways many times over.

Meanwhile, the two pianists will be in Bangkok, Thailand, next week for a performance of four concertos. The Schumann and Tchaikovsky concertos will be played at the Piayaphand Sanitwongse Foundation Concert Hall on July 30 while the Grieg A Minor Concerto and Rachmaninoff's Second will be played at the Mission Hospital Concert Hall on July 31.

They will return after a week for another outreach concert in Virac, Catanduanes, on Aug. 11 under the auspices of the Philippine National Red Cross Catanduanes Chapter under OIC David Tempionuevo and Dr. Marcel Zantua.

Rehearsal before the wedding: A tale of fact and friction

BY BART GUINGONA

WE are all sitting around amid a symphony of cell phone rings when the couple arrives, each half apologizing profusely. Normally, they are impeccably punctual for rehearsals and always come prepared and warmed up. But this isn't a normal rehearsal day. The couple, Lara Fabregas and Raymond Bagatsing, are two days away from their wedding and they are besieged by everyone, from aggressive TV interviewers to irate couturiers to concerned future in-laws, to "helpful" friends to boosy, stressed-out directors.

It's also a little over a week before "The Lark" opens and everyone's nerves are naturally beginning to fray. The costume mistress is tucked in a corner of the hall, taking last-minute measurements while the stage manager is deep in discussion with his crew working out the property requirements. Cast members, in an attempt to hide their nervousness, exchange boisterous stories during the wait. The soundman rehearses his music cues on the CD deck. Chaos and mayhem and a tinge of panic permeate the smoke-filled rehearsal hall and Lara's pout clearly says, "I don't need any more of this a few days before my wedding!" Raymond comes up to me and again apologizes for being late and then thumbs at her telling me that she's really, really stressed, as if I couldn't see for myself. I pat my sympathy on her shoulder, try to ignore the pout and clap my hands as loudly as I can.

"All right, everybody! Listen! Game plan for today." I then proceed to enumerate the goals we should accomplish for the day's rehearsal. Everyone settles down and takes their places. There is a bustle and Michael (Williams, who plays Warwick), says his first line. Out of the corner of my eye, I see Raymond going into the lotus position and a friend coming through the entrance of the hall carrying a petition for my artists to sign regarding the NCCA leadership. I toss her a subdued wave and turn my attention to the scene unfolding before me.

LARA Fabregas

Suddenly, in the middle of her first line, Lara lets out an unexpected, nerve-jangling "primal scream." For those of you who are unfamiliar with the work that actors do, it's basically an unbridled, insane yell at the top of one's lungs designed to clear the psyche and emotions of cobwebs and clutter. I thought this one would clear my ears of wax. She then excuses herself for "five seconds" and rushes to the bathroom. When she reemerges, she is quite placid, asking for her last line cue as if nothing had happened.

Gratifying scream

I look around at the rest of the cast and no one seems perturbed by what would normally have been considered utterly psychotic behavior. Raymond has shot her a cur-sey glance and returns to his meditation on the costume mistress examining the tape measure through her grubby glasses, and the stage manager doesn't even bother to look up from his script. I ask myself if I'm the only crazy person in this room.

In truth, although the stress of putting up a production goes into high gear as the opening night draws nearer, there's nothing more gratifying than seeing a bunch of people so doggedly pulling together to keep the boat afloat. That it tells us about the value of pulling together for a cause (theater taught me this before GMA's Sona expressed it) is just one more way by which the value of the craft manifests itself. That makes the theater a place of wonder, where the human spirit is celebrated in a most human of endeavors.

Settling into the rehearsals, I

Visionary heals a patient who was in coma for two months

SOMETIMES there are miracle stories that many find to be unbelievably true. Such a miracle happened to Norma Apalang Francisca of Iba, Zambales, who was confined in a hospital in Winnipeg, Canada in February 2000.

Norma, a former nurse at Lions Gate Hospital, experienced severe stomach pain in the second week of January 2000. The doctor advised surgery. She was examined afterward and again was told to go through another operation on Feb. 28.

This time, the surgery was unsuccessful that Norma was placed in the ICU for two months. Her family, however, did not give up and asked help from other relatives who are also doctors. Her comatose condition was induced, according to the doctor, by a liter of pus.

Herminia Marquez Diana, who used to work as a caregiver in Canada, was asked by her friend Orbita to visit Norma in the hospital. Herminia, who is called "Tita Min," was already retired at this time and had concentrated on healing and taking down messages of the Virgin Mary through inner location.

Herminia's first visit took place on March 21, 2000. She saw how a life support system helped Norma survive. She prayed over her and went home. During a deep meditation, the Lord told Herminia that He would heal Norma.

On the second visit on March 31, Herminia and Orbita prayed over Norma asking the Lord to give them His healing power.

This time, Herminia talked to Norma and told her they were there to ask the Lord to heal her. She also told Norma to ask the Lord to help her, so she could be with her family again. Herminia suddenly saw tears coming out of Norma's eyes.

On their third visit on April 7, Orbita and Herminia saw Norma move her legs and hands. The attending nurse quickly checked the apparatus to find out how that happened.

On April 14, Orbita and Herminia saw Norma in the recovery room. The doctor feared, however, that she would not be able to talk. But she did, and her first words were, "Thank you, Lord."

Her mission

Herminia, who now lives in Queen's Row, Bacoor, Cavite, told me she was led to her mission of taking down Our Lady's messages and healing when she visited Medjugorje on June 18, 1996. She went to the place with friends from Vancouver, Canada.

In Medjugorje, she became close to a couple, Jim and Bobbi, who translated the message of Our Lady given to her by inner location on June 26, 1996.

Partly it said: "Please allow me, your Blessed Mother, to work through you. Remain open. Pray, my child, pray without ceasing. There is much work for you to do in my garden. Prepare yourself every day. Ready your heart, listen to my word and then act."

2,000 Hail Mary's

When Herminia came back to the Philippines in 1996, she started the praying of 2,000 Hail Mary's on the first Saturday of every month at the Queen of Peace Parish in Queen's Row, Bacoor, Cavite.

Everyone is invited on Aug. 4 at 8 a.m. for the praying of 2,000 Hail Mary's at the Queen of Peace Parish.

The Queen of Peace Parish is located on Area B. According to Fr. Paul de Leon, it will be held until 6 p.m. Letty Zapanta tells me of the efficacy of Our Lady's intercession through the 2,000 Hail Mary's. To ask for healing, please call Herminia Diana at (046) 572-2730.

Sale of Loving Hands' icons

LIFE

Walt Disney's 'Read Along' series

KIDS today are more advanced than those born a generation or two ago. Three-year-olds who can read with comprehension are a common sight in preschools. They can even do simple arithmetic. What these children can achieve with the proper training is unimaginable. But ultimately, they are still kids and the importance of play and fun in their development toward becoming a well-adjusted person must never be underestimated.

It is with this in mind that Walt Disney Co. developed its "Read Along" series. Made up of a read-along book and a sound recording of the contents, the package introduces young children to famous Disney stories while teaching them to read at the same time. The 24-page beautifully illustrated color book is very attractive, and the recording not only contains the story but also character voices, vivid sound effects and music.

Now available in the local market are 10 titles of these book and CD packs. Priced at a very affordable P250 per title, the "Read Along" stories re-live the magic of the timeless films popularized by Disney and guarantee hours and hours of reading pleasure for any child.

FOR FEEDBACK, TEXT US AT (0919) 661-2337 OR EMAIL US AT LIFESTYLE@INQUIRER.COM.PH

The titles recently released include famous children's classics adapted by Disney and box-office successes of the past few years: "The Original Story of Winnie the Pooh," "Cinderella," "Lion King," "Toy Story," "Dinosaur," "A Bug's Life," "The Jungle Book," "Lady and the Tramp," "101 Dalmatians" and "Pinocchio." Watch out for other titles soon.

The book and CD pack collection is manufactured by Viva Records Corp., a Viva Entertainment Co. under license from the Walt Disney Co.

Deseret International founders honored with lifetime achievement award

DURING a recent convention in Salt Lake City, Utah, Nu Skin Enterprises (NSE), a Utah-based distributor of personal care and nutrition products, presented the Force for Good Lifetime Achievement Award to Dr. William Jackson and his wife Audrey. The Jacksons are the co-founders of Deseret International Foundation, an organization which provides corrective surgery to patients in the Philippines and other countries who, otherwise, would not have access to such services.

The lifetime achievement award was established by NSE to recognize individuals who have made a significant personal commitment to an endeavor that changes lives for good.

In making the presentation before a large crowd of 8,000 NSE distributors and representatives in Salt Lake City, Sandie Tillotson, NSE senior vice president, said, "We are pleased to recognize Dr. William Jackson and his wife Audrey Jackson." Tillotson proceeded to explain how the Jacksons became involved in humanitarian service.

"In 1989" he said, "after living three years in the Philippines and growing to love the people, (William and Audrey) were concerned about the children who were suffering from disfiguring disabilities." Tillotson explained that, under the guidance of the Jacksons, the Mabuhay Deseret Foundation was formed in the Philippines. Children were brought from all over to receive corrective procedures and new hospitals were opened to treat more children.

After returning to the United States, the Jacksons came into contact with other people who had similar experiences, and a new organization evolved—the Deseret International Foundation. The mission of Deseret International is to assist local health providers to develop permanent, year-round programs that enable them to more adequately and expeditiously deal with specific health problems that are correctable and will enhance the patient's quality of life.

Each year, Deseret International sponsors over 10,000 surgical corrections which average less than $30 per procedure. Approximately 50 doctors per year volunteer to travel from the United States at their own expense to provide specific training and assistance to sites located across the globe, including the Philippines. Partnerships currently exist within 16 countries including the Philippines, India, Brazil, Nigeria and the Dominican Republic. And the list is growing each year.

"Because of the determination and vision of (the Jacksons)," Tillotson concluded, "children who once hid behind their mother's skirts to avoid being seen now smile proudly. Children who once needed to be carried in order to move about now walk straight and tall on their own. Because of the efforts of these two people, thousands of lives have been improved."

Nu Skin Enterprises became involved with Deseret International in 1994 and has partnered with it on many projects providing monetary donations for operating expenses and design and printing services to publish the foundation's newsletter and other materials.

Add a decade to your life

The keys: vegetarian diet, regular exercise, no smoking

IT's tried-and-true advice—eat better, get some exercise, quit smoking, and you'll live longer. But how much longer? A new study shows you might just add a full decade—10 years of good-quality living.

"Even making modest changes (in lifestyle) looks like it adds many years to your life," says Gary Fraser, MBChB, PhD, professor of medicine and epidemiology at Loma Linda (Calif.) University. His study appears in the July 9 issue of Archives of Internal Medicine.

For the study—which he began in 1976—Fraser sent questionnaires to more than 34,000 men and women, all members of the California Seventh-Day Adventist Church and all over age 30. Each was asked numerous, detailed questions regarding medical history, weight and height, diet, level of physical activity, and smoking habits.

While physical disabilities preclude some respondents from getting more vigorous exercise, Fraser says, others seemed to avoid exercise. "We wanted to focus on the effects of choosing not to exercise," he says.

"Compared with other Californians, we found that Adventist men lived about 7.3 years longer and women lived about 4.4 years longer," says Fraser. "And for vegetarian Adventists who eat meat (no more than) once a month—which accounts for about 30 percent Adventists—the differences in life expectancy swell to 9.5 years in men and 6.1 years in women. Those are pretty big numbers."

It wasn't just diet that made the vegetarians so much healthier, Fraser says. "A vegetarian is much more than someone who doesn't eat meat," he points out. "They're much more likely to eat legumes, exercise a bit more, are more health conscious."

While other studies have focused on risk factors like cholesterol and blood pressure, Fraser says his is the first to look at health behaviors—things people can readily change.

Fraser's findings mirror similar studies conducted in Japan, says Bradley Willcox, MD, a fellow in gerontology at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and in geriatric medicine at Harvard University, both in Boston. Willcox is co-investigator of the Okinawa Centenarian Study and author of the book, "The Okinawa Program".

"Our studies show that populations that follow what we describe as healthy behaviors do live profoundly longer—up to 5 to 10 years longer than those who don't," says Willcox. "And most of those years tend to be disability-free."

Fraser's study is more evidence attesting to "the power of lifestyle over genetics," says Willcox. "In our work, we've found that lifestyle accounts for about two-thirds of life expectancy; only one-third is due to genetics."

"Okinawans are very active, but they're not out pounding the pavement jogging," he says. "They do things they enjoy—walking, gardening. They also do karate and a traditional dance similar to Tai Chi, which gives them cardiovascular fitness as well as strength and better balance. All this keeps them lean, and leaner people get less cancer. It keeps bones dense, metabolism efficient, keeps them flexible, which is important for reducing risk of falls, a major cause of illness and death in older people."

While Fraser's study did not look at the impact of religion, Willcox says he considers spirituality—and having a support system—to be essential in a healthy lifestyle. "We look at it as four legs of a chair—diet, exercise, psychosocial factors, spirituality—and each leg has to be in balance," he says. (from WebMD Medical News)

Molicare's leak protection guarantee

DEPENDABLE adult diapers are a must. They must be able to support all sorts of activities—brisk walking, long travel or simply going about one's daily routine. Hartmann's Molicare adult diaper has included the wetness-repellant inner cuffs in its adult incontinence diapers. The cuffs provide perfect protection against leakage at the sides due to prolonged or heavy use.

"Molicare is your best bet when it comes to heavy use and reliability," assured Dr. Antonio C. Macatangay, president of Medical Center Trading Corporation.

"It features elastic foil backing that enables the body to move comfortably," he said.

Molicare adult diaper is distributed by Medical Center Trading Corporation and is also available in all Mercury Drugstores nationwide.

When our love grows old

IF WE think about it, old age is not a stage in life that's exclusively for our grandparents and other aging members of the family. When a loved one retires, becomes bedridden and grows old, the children or grandchildren also go through the changes old age brings.

It is a special time for all of us.

Elderly life ushers in a reversal of roles within the family. It is now our turn to care for our aging relatives who nurtured and guided us from infancy. Now that our elderly loved ones begin to lose physical strength, youth and independence, they become like our children needing comfort, love and attention. We are now to bear the lamp in their twilight years. The child is father to man again.

Maybe people grow old because we need to be reminded of the more important aspects of life. Old age is indeed a precious moment for the younger caregivers to express gratitude, respect, and generosity to our parents and grandparents. The changing hands of time bring with it a continuity of the circles of love and care we pass on from generation to generation. Because ultimately, love never grows old and only love transcends time.

Yes, old age can be one of the most rewarding parts of life, not just for our old timers but for the whole family.

Study: exercise helps mental health

CHICAGO, July 22—Elderly women who exercise regularly are less prone to suffer mental decline, another indication that physical activity helps stave off some of the frailties of aging, researchers said on Sunday.

"This finding supports the hypothesis that physical activity prevents cognitive (mental) decline in older women," said study author Kristine Yaffe, a psychiatrist and neurologist at the University of California at San Francisco.

The researchers tracked nearly 6,000 mostly white, healthy women aged 65 or older living in planned communities, such as nursing homes, whose mental faculties and levels of exercise were evaluated over a

Make the best of what lies ahead with Dr. P. adult diapers. Just like a trusted physician, Dr. P. adult diapers offer expert management of elderly incontinence or poor bladder and bowel control in old age. Its advanced features also provide excellent protection against diaper rash that usually occurs with elderly incontinence.

For reliable dry protection at all times, Dr. P.'s super absorbent pad actively transforms wetness into dry gel. While high-speed channels enhance absorption of urine and ensure its even flow across the pad. A wetness indicator also makes diaper checks extra convenient and more accurate. Dr. P. also comes with standing leak guards that gently enwrap the legs to prevent side spills, adding to ease and secured mobility. In addition, Dr. P.'s unisex contoured shape is a perfect natural fit that provides discreet protection and maximum comfort.

Complete with an antibiosis and deodorization layer for extra defense against infection-causing bacteria and odor. Dr. P.'s breakthrough antibiosis and deodorization layer effectively controls harmful germs that cause abscesses and other skin infections. Based on tests conducted by the Food Technology Development Centre of Taiwan, Dr. P.'s antibacterial agents actively kill the microorganisms Staphylococcus Aureus (98.03 percent) and Bacillus Coli (65.29 percent). While a powerful deodorizer reduces the unpleasant smell of urine and feces to provide users with a cleaner, more comfortable feeling.

The best you can give, Dr. P. adult diapers significantly helps restore control, comfort and confidence to the elderly, and convenience and efficiency to their caregivers.

Dr. P. is also recommended for post-maternity and post-surgery care and hygiene. Available at all leading supermarkets and drugstores nationwide.

Major awards for Guam visitors bureau

DURING the recently concluded Travel Tour Expo 2001 (TTE 2001) sponsored by the Philippine Travel Agents Association (PTAA), the Guam Visitors Bureau (GVB) bagged three major awards for their participation in this year's event. The Bureau received 3rd place for most popular booth, 2nd place for best booth design and the winner of the best in marketing effort. A delegation from Guam headed by James Nelson, general manager of GVB, assisted travel consumers with their questions regarding Guam.

Jimmy Dee and the Chamorras performed during the whole show, giving visitors to TTE 2001 a glimpse of the warmth and hospitality of Guam. Also present during the show was Joseph Zitnik, general manager of the Holiday Inn Resort Guam. A raffle conducted during the second day of the expo included a round trip ticket to Guam via Continental Micronesia with accommodations and breakfast provided by Holiday Inn Resort, located on Guam's tourism center, Tumon Bay. The prize also included a dinner show for two at SandCastle, passes for underwater world and dinner at Jimmy Dee's Sunset Fiesta.

Pravia Residence Hotel addresses housing need

GREENFIELD Development Corporation (GDC) and Property Partnership Inc. (PPI) recently formalized an agreement for PPI to develop the Pravia Residence Hotel in the Sta. Rosa Business Park (SRBP). Due to the business boom in the area, there has been a steady rise in demand for adequate lodging that serves the needs of the corporate community.

Pravia Hotel is a proposed 9 story structure, seven of which will be first class serviced apartment units comprised of 105 comfortable residential units. A unique feature of this project is the IBO (Invest-Build-Own) Comunidades investment model, wherein PPI will assemble a group of investors and collectively make them the developer. This will effectively eliminate the traditional developer mark-up, allowing the units to be purchased at cost while simultaneously providing safeguards against investor risk.

In addition, investors will be able to generate very attractive income on their units by having their units operated and managed as a residence hotel (a.k.a. serviced apartment). For more inquiries on how to invest in Pravia, call 815-1759.

Resurrecting Maningning MiClat

BY ELIZABETH LOLARGA

THE IMAGE of a beautiful, gifted, youthful woman plunging to her death seven stories below has not ceased to affect members of the literary and art community. The profound reverberations of poet-painter Maningning Cruz MiClat's suicide last year are emerging.

A rich harvest of verses is being compiled into an anthology in her memory with her pen-and-ink drawings and AAP Grand Prize-winning painting "Trouble in Paradise" illustrating this Anvil book to be released in September in time for her first death anniversary. The book's title is "Beauty for Ashes," which is a phrase from the book of Isaiah 6:13 ("To console those who mourn in Zion, to give them beauty for ashes").

Alma MiClat, Maningning's mother, said the book is just one of the projects of the newly formed Maningning MiClat Art Foundation Inc. Set up to recognize and promote Filipino and other Asian talents age 28 (the age at which she died) and below, the organization sprang initially from a suggestion of some MiClat relatives to find a place to house her paintings. They were moved by the tributes and eulogies at her wake.

Later, in a case of serendipity, Alma ran into Chuki Feria-Miranda, daughter of the late writer Dolores Stephens Feria and head of the Punla sa Tao Foundation, at feminist Raquel Tiglao's wake. There they started talking about a foundation that would see and nurture the potential of writers and artists in much the same manner that the parents of Maningning went out of their way to develop her early promise.

Young painter

While they were still living in China in the '70s and early '80s, Mario, her father, and Alma found a master to teach their daughter The Four Gentlemen's Method of Chinese painting. She learned to execute brushworks of bamboo, orchids, chrysanthemums and plum blossoms.

Back in the Philippines after the 1986 Edsa Revolt, they next sought to nurture her poetry, which she had started writing in Chinese. Why not Filipino? they asked her, then enrolled her at Virgilio Almario's Poetry Clinic. After the clinic, she joined the poets' group Linangan sa Imagen, Retorika at Anyo.

Alma envisions the foundation to offer that kind of apprenticeship, a linking up of a master or mentor who can do something for a young talent. She said, "We would like to have more Maningnings in this world and in our own small way, we will try to harness these talents. We will seek out those others who not only have no money but don't enjoy the support of their parents."

Incorporated on April 15 this year, what would have been Maningning's 29th birthday and coincidentally the Feast of the Resurrection (Easter), the foundation is made up of Alma and Mario, Chuki, Herman Gamboa of the Systems Technology Institute, businessman Maynard Halili, Joaquin Sy of the Kaisa Heritage Center, James T. C. Yu of World News and the Society of Contemporary Art and Literature, Dr. Edna Manlapaz of the Ateneo Library of Women's Writings (Aliww) and Ding Ramos of Data Center Design Corp.

Meticulous

Alma felt Maningning's "precise and meticulous hand" is still working, particularly in the selection of incorporators. First, she discovered that her deceased daughter left a stash of $2,200, probably saved from her trips abroad and sales of paintings. She decided that the amount would be used as seed money for the foundation. It was time to look for donors who could match the savings.

She met Maynard at a tribute to Maningning and the late Tagumpay Mangahas, son of Roger and Fe Mangahas. When Alma was asked to respond at the opening of Maningning's exhibit of memorabilia at Aliww, she announced the need for donors to the foundation. It will also earn from the royalties of the sales of the book of poems "Voice from the Underworld" and other future books like a planned collection of essays by Mario and his late daughter. Right away, Maynard volunteered to match Maningning's savings. Touched, Alma wept.

During the same occasion, National Artist Napoleon Abueva, who did Maningning's death mask, described her in these terms—there are only two kinds of people in this world: the giver and the taker. Maningning was definitely a giver.

Nurtured

Edna, meanwhile, nurtured Maningning from the time the latter turned over her memorabilia (three volumes of studies submitted to Roberto Chabet's art class, drafts of poems and short stories, and calligraphy) to Aliww. Maningning also contributed Chinese poems to World News under James. These poems were later gathered in her first book "My Poems." Chuki's link is her mother who was Maningning's guardian in Baguio during her freshman year there. Alma tapped Ding, a certified public accountant, because he is "a finance expert who can manage the money well and make it grow."

The vision of the foundation is "to build a pan-Asian community of young artists exemplified by Maningning MiClat in her life." In this regard, it will periodically give an award in her name for excellence in poetry and painting, undertake creative programs like exhibits, poetry readings and book launches in collaboration with other organizations, and document artworks and memorabilia of young artists beginning with Maningning.

In a way it can be said Maningning lives on.
